CHAINED A WARSHIP.

An Incident of the War Between Greece and Turkey.

A YOUNG OFFICER'S DARING.

The Turk's Pluck and Strategy Resulted in Making a Powerful Greek Vessel a Helpless Prisoner Within the Landlocked Waters of Arta.

It was during the war between Greece and Turkey in 1897 that the inhabitants of Gala Krini—a large village, since destroyed by the Turks, on the shores of the gulf of Arta—awoke one morning to find that a Hellenic battleship had entered the gulf and cast anchor off the shore. The surprise of the inhabitants of Gala Krini was nothing compared with that of a party of five Turkish officers, who, fresh from the crest of a hill towering above the village, watched the vessel through their telescopes.

These Turkish officers were on an urgent and important mission—to block out the Hellenic fleet from the gulf of Arta. Behind them, at the bottom of the deep ravine, were a number of heavy guns which had been dragged all the way from Saloniki, a long and difficult task, and with this artillery they had been ordered to fortify the strait.

To reach the strait, however, the Turkish column had to run the gauntlet of the battleship's heavy guns, which meant sheer destruction. Somehow or other they must escape the man-of-war or prevent her interference with their work, but to do this seemed impossible.

In the midst of their discussion a young officer who had been listening said he could hold the vessel a prisoner if they would allow him. His pleading won, and, hurriedly changing his clothes for those of a shepherd, he descended in that disguise to Gala Krini.

Late that night a number of figures stole through the dark alleys of the village toward the shore. Close to the water's edge was an old boathouse, used as a shed for repairing boats. This the party silently entered and by the flickering light of a taper searched the black interior. At length there was a gentle rattle and from the gloom emerged Hassan, stripped to the waist, dragging a heavy chain. This, with the help of his comrades, he began to pull, and after an hour's laborious work the end of the great chain—once the cable of a Turkish vessel—was reached.

From the beach the chain was loaded on board a large calque, whose sides and floor had been covered with cloth to deaden the sound. This task accomplished, three men got in with Hassan and rowed with muffled oars toward a large rock in the middle of the bight. Round this rock the chain was laid and securely fastened. One man having been landed on the crag to keep guard over this end, the boat

RENEWAL OF THE MISSION IN ST. PATRICK'S CHURCH AND BLESSING OF THE NEW STATIONS.

The renewal of the Mission in St. Patrick's Church, Napanee was opened on Friday last June 24th. Mass was celebrated at 9 o'clock by the Rev. pastor, Father O'Connor and after explaining the reasons of the renewal the Rev. Father Ethelbert, O. F. M. delivered an inspiring instruction on the love of the sacred heart of Jesus for mankind. In the evening, His Grace the Archbishop of Kingston, solemnly blessed and indulgenced the new stations of the Way of the Cross, the generous gift of a parishioner, Mrs. A. McNeil, costing the munificent sum of eleven hundred dollars. These oil paintings of the Way of the Cross are a work of great artistic beauty, executed by a special artist for Mayer & Co. of Munich, Bavaria. They form a real gallery of perfect studies each detail is well worked out and the figures unusually expressive. They are the admiration of all who have seen them and His Grace, the Archbishop struck the true note when he declared that "not in the whole Province can one find stations more artistic or more devotional." At the service of the solemn blessing the Rev. Father Ethelbert was the speaker. He pointed out the Catholic idea of the painting of the stations and said, "They are like a book, written not in the words of any national tongue but in the language of the heart." Therein he says "All may read for deeds stand for words and deeds are intelligible to all, to the poor and the rich, to the simple and learned." To this book all may come in the hour of sorrow and suffering and find comfort and encouragement, thus we perceive their religious purpose to bring before us more forcibly the figure of the crucified Saviour who has gone before us bearing His Cross, showing us the way we must follow. At the close of the ceremony the Archbishop addressed the congregation. He expressed his pleasure at being present on this occasion, he thanked them all for their generous co-operation in beautifying the house of God as seen in the many improvements made recently through the zeal of the ladies of the altar society. He also spoke in feeling terms of the joy it gave him to see such harmony and devotedness and thanked in a special manner the good benefactress who donated the admirable paintings of the Way of the Cross. The renewal closed successfully on Sunday evening when the church was taxed to its utmost capacity. Large numbers of Protestants came with their Catholic friends to hear the Rev. Missionary's last instruction. The subject was the unchangeableness of the doctrine of the Catholic church. The Rev. Father was listened to with marked attention as he spoke for over an hour on the church's development, through the past ages, and its immutability of doctrine, because founded on Him who is the same yesterday, to-day and forever. Not a person left the church although the heat was terribly oppressive which was in itself a splendid tribute to the zeal and eloquence of the missionary and gave clear evidence of the love and appreciation that the good people of Napanee bear to the devoted priest.

sides and floor had been covered with cloth to deaden the sound. This task accomplished, three men got in with Hassan and rowed with muffled oars toward a large rock in the middle of the bight. Round this rock the chain was laid and securely fastened. One man having been landed on the crag to keep guard over this end, the boat set out cautiously for the battleship, looming like a phantom in the distance. Not a sound did the men make as link by link the massive chain was paid out over the stern into the still water till they reached the vessel.

There was an excited gleam in Hassan's eyes as, with a sign to his comrades, he gradually lowered himself into the dark water, guiding himself by passing his fingers over the battleship's plates. A slight grating of the chain against the hull was all that his anxious companions in the boat heard, though now and then a reassuring puff was felt on the line that Hassan held, directing them how to pay out the chain. Hours rather than minutes seemed to have gone by ere the young officer came to the surface. So exhausted by his long dive was he that he had to be almost lifted into the boat.

"It is round the propeller," he gasped. "I have fixed it so that nothing can move it. Back you go."

Then link by link the tedious work was renewed until the boat returned to its starting point, where the other end of the chain was secured. The risky task was done, and the Hellenic battleship was securely moored to an immovable rock by a double thickness of cable.

The early rays of dawn revealed a sight which astonished the Greek commander. A whole regiment of Turks were on the march toward the strait of Arta, with train after train of artillery, the last of which disappeared beyond the intervening head before the ship's guns could be brought to bear on them. The commander gave orders for the guns to be run out and decks cleared for action, while the anchor was weighed, his intention being to prevent the Turks from fortifying the strait before they had become too strong. "Full speed ahead!" went the order to the engine room, and, propelled by her mighty screw, the battleship advanced, only to lurch backward as dragged by some unseen force. Work as the engines would, the vessel seemed to be in an enchanted circle, beyond which it was impossible to go.

It was not until the sun's rays had penetrated the deep blue water alongside that the secret was revealed and the massive chain was discovered passing round the ship's propeller and the adjacent rock.

Before it could be removed, however, the strait had been sufficiently fortified by the Turks and a powerful Greek warship lay a helpless prisoner within the landlocked waters of Arta.

The heart of man is made to reconcile contradictions.—Hume.

DESERONTO ROAD

Picking strawberries is all the rush these days. Mr. John Wood Thompson may rightfully be called the strawberry king this year as he had picked from his patch on Monday of this week nineteen hundred boxes. Should the dry weather continue much longer the crop will suffer for want of rain, and the yield be materially lessened.

The farmers along here have mostly all commenced haying operations. The hay crop is a fairly good one, and a little beyond last season, as there is a much larger quantity of red clover and Alsike.

Messrs Arch Amey and Charles Thompson are busy men just now picking strawberries and drawing pickers from Deseronto.

George Holland is hired with Ed. McFaul for the season and is busy cutting hay.

Robert Allen Sager is again working the Sand Hill, having planted it with potatoes.

Mr. Allen Oliver is doing some carpenter work on his barn and putting a new sill under it.

Mr. Andrew Oliver still continues very low and failing fast with no hopes of recovery.

A complaint has been filed in the United States Circuit Court at New York asking for an investigation into the affairs of the Cobalt Central Mines Company.

Mr. Oliver of Preston, found a tramp in his barn and when he ordered him out the man drew a knife and stabbed him. The tramp was arrested and committed to jail.

ENGINEER'S REPORT

On the Proposed Trunk Sewer on Dundas Street.

A meeting of the town council was held on Monday afternoon to receive the report of the engineer, in reference to the trunk sewer on Dundas street. The engineer, Mr. Wright, was present and read his report, also making any explanations required by the council. Following is the report:

Kingston, June 22nd, 1910.

Gentlemen,—As Engineer appointed for the Town of Napanee to advise re the extension of your present Sewage system, I beg herewith to report on the proposed intercepting sewer on Main street from Bridge street to West street as follows:

I made a general reconnaissance of the town and found that there were three possible and practical routes for the main intercepting sewer: No. 1, directly along Main street from Bridge street to the outlet already provided at West street; No. 2, along Main street from Bridge to John street, thence along John street to Mill street, thence along Mill street to the West street outlet; No. 3, Similar to No. 2 as far as the intersection of Mill and Robert streets, thence along Robert street to Water street, thence along Water street to the West street outlet. The three routes being both feasible and practical it remained simply to decide on the best route with all points pertaining to the case considered, viz:

1 the intercepting of all the sewage and surface water from the area lying between Main street, West street and the G. T. Ry. as well as a portion of the Camden road; 2, the immediate and thorough drainage of Main street from Bridge to West streets; 3, the probable cost of each.

Sewer No. 2 could be built a little cheaper on Mill street as an intercepting sewer only, which would necessitate the subsequent construction of a sewer on Main street from John to West street at practically the same depth as No. 1 to thoroughly drain the business section and allow for the deepening of the cellars, giving a clearance of 8 feet below the floor joists.

The 18 in. tile sewer on John street between Main and Mill street which might have been used as part of sewer No. 2 was found to be built of a poor quality of tile, parts of which have already crushed.

The cost of construction of Mill st. diversion together with this extra block of sewer and two extra manholes on Mill street would about equal the cost of the sewer on Main street between John and West streets.

What has been already said in regard to sewer No. 2 also applies to sewer No. 3, but with less in its favor as regards cost, it being an extra block longer than sewer No. 2.

The portion of the intersecting sewer on Main street between Bridge and John streets need not be considered in the discussion as it forms a necessary link of all three proposed routes and at practically the same depths throughout.

Children Cry FOR FLETCHER'S CASTORIA

John streets need not be considered in the discussion as it forms a necessary link of all three proposed routes and at practically the same depths throughout.

I therefore corroborate my statements made to your Committee at a previous meeting when I advised the construction of the main intercepting sewer on Main street from Bridge street to West street. I have prepared a plan and profile of the proposed sewer both of which are to accompany this report.

The plan on a scale of 200 ft. to 1 inch outlines generally the proposed location shewing the manner of intercepting the sewage at the various streets in question.

The profile on a scale of 100 ft. to 1 inch horizontally and 10 ft. to 1 inch vertically indicates the proposed sewer on a through grade of 0.217' or 1 ft. fall in 400 feet.

This sewer will intercept all sewage and surface water from the aforesaid area and carry the same to a sufficient outlet already provided at West street and drain every cellar from Bridge to West streets. It further indicates the location and depth of Manholes, the approximate amount of excavation including, clay and solid rock and the depths and size of the tile required.

The total estimated cost of the intercepting sewer including all excavation, tile and junctions and laying of same, back filling and placing the surplus material as road metal on Main street, manholes, engineering and inspection is $10,830.84. This estimate is based on the assumption that the town handles the work by day labor under a competent foreman.

The details of the location of the sewer are as follows: Commencing at the manholes in the centre of the intersection of Main and West streets then following the centre line of Main street to a point 25 feet east of the intersection of the South side of Bridge street and the North side of Main street, 21 inch tile to be used from West street to Centre street; 20 inch tile from Centre street to John street; 15 inch tile from John street to Adelphi street; 12 inch tile from Adelphi to Bridge street. Square concrete manholes 30 in. at top, 36 in. at bottom to be provided as shown on plan with perforated cast iron covers to suit.

The depths to the invert of the sewer are as follows:

West street, 12.5	below manhole cover
Robert st., 10.75	below top of manhole
Centre st., 15.18	" " "
John st., 15.42	" " "
East st., 15.06	" " "
Adelphi st., 11.91	" " "
Bridge st., 5.37	" " "

I would advise that the flushing of the sewer be done through the manhole at Bridge street by means of the town hose attached to the nearest hydrant rather than by taking advantage of the high water in the river at spring time as suggested to me. My reason for this is that during the dry season when flushing is most necessary the water of the river is not available for flushing purposes as the water is too low to enter the end of the sewer by natural means, the level of the river during the dry season being 1.7 feet below the invert of the end of the sewer.

If your Committee advises the construction of the work by contract instead of day labor and Council authorizes the construction of the same, the work should be finally staked out on the ground and a final working plan, profile and specifications prepared from which contractors can submit a tender.

I would be pleased to meet your Committee at any time to consider the report in detail.

Respectfully submitted,
GEO. WRIGHT

The Rev. W. C. Gannett has come to the conclusion that society is living under a child government—that the parent has abdicated in favor of his children. That this is true many parents will admit if they pause to consider what they have allowed to go on in their own households. They are working with the good of their children solely in view, not in the sense of directing and advising the boys and girls, but as servitors to young monarchs whom they are preparing for rule.

In the matter of their studies even in the elementary schools few parents exercise any supervision or help. In many cases they do not know the names of those who teach their children and almost never co-operate with the teacher in helping the child over the hard places in the curriculum. Long before most children are through the grammar schools they have, by their parents' apathy or acquiescence, taken the bit in their own teeth, decided what they will or will not study and how much studying they will do. When they reach high school the emancipation from parent rule is usually complete, and by the time they are in college the roles are reversed and it is they who reign.

As for the moral instruction or preparation for the spiritual side of life the same apathy on the part of the parents exists. Family worship or even the contemplation of spiritual things in the home is sadly a minus quantity. Instruction in the Sunday school is, as Mr. Gannett points out, left to earnest but young and sometimes uneducated persons, and has in nowise kept up with the education of the day school. Of this, too, the parents are unheeding.

As a horse knows almost instantly the touch of the inexperienced driver on his rein, so the child learns at an early age to take advantage of parental indifference or overaffection, and it is not many years before the young man or woman is the most important personage in the family, imperious, arrogant, and too often disrespectful of those who should reign, but who have lost their right to by abdicating to their young subjects.

Professor Muensterberg has given another interesting demonstration of his "psychological" method of forcing confessions from criminals or covering them with confusion before juries. There is no doubt "something" in his method, which consists in testing testimony by selecting suggestive words and inducing hesitancy and fear. It is very easy to astonish and impress

TEST OF RELIGIOUS TRUTH

That Which Is From Above Must Lift Up, That Which Is Heavenly Must Transform

"The wisdom that is from above is full of mercy and good fruits."—James iii. 17.

Modern life properly makes one imperative demand of religion, that it shall be worth while, that it shall produce effects not simply equal to its professions but commensurate with its cost. Men have a right, provided their vision is broad enough, to apply their economic thinking to religion and to ask, Does it pay?

No matter what a man's creed may be it has some result in his living, it affects his relations with his fellows and, in the measure that he esteems it and nourishes it in his heart, it dominates his whole life. The worst thing you could say about a creed would be that it had no fruitage in life; that would mean it had no place in any heart.

It is possible that one's creed may seem to be able to stand every test of historical investigation; it may be constructed with the utmost logical exactitude and nicety; it may even bear all the brands of authority, proudly proclaiming itself as born of heaven, and yet be the most damnable piece of iniquity known to the mind of man.

Many a man who is proud of his creed because it withstands all the assaults of critic and scoffer, of skeptic and cynic, ought to be most heartily ashamed of it if it succeeds only in strengthening base motives, in binding burdens on the weak, in and evil pride and in giving a man pernicious ideals, thus setting him out of all harmony with the good.

It is time that we stop looking at the historical roots and the philosophical buttresses of our creeds and take a long look at their fruits. It is time we ask not alone "Is this born of heaven?" but "Does the cherishing of these views make me truly heavenly? Does it make this world more like heaven? Does it strike out meanness, covetousness, baseness from my breast, and force me at any cost to seek the better ways?"

A bottle of poison may be labeled as beautifully as one containing nourishment. By their effects you may know them. We ought to study the effects of our creeds on human characters and human conditions. The time has come to turn from belaboring one another as to the form of bottles and the color of the labels and to inquire whether we have food or poison in them.

This that you say you believe, what does it do for you, what difference does it make to your living, to your deeds? In what way are you another and a worthier man for your religious exercises? If these things make no difference to you, if church and creed produce no results and work no changes, effect no enlargement and enriching of your life, how can you justify the time and strength spent in them?

They are either a power of life unto larger living or they are a potency of death that spreads sorrow and disease. A man's religion either gives him the power of a larger, sweeter, a more loving and world enriching life, or it narrows his sympathies and makes him a source of moral and spiritual contagion and ill. Either your creed makes you live a nobler life or it binds you up and drags you down as a weight on your world.

Here is the proof of orthodoxy and here is the assurance of religious faith for any man. Few can apply the historical and the philosophical tests to their religion, but the test of the life, of the effects on our own characters, and on conditions about us we may all apply. You may not be able to read its ancient letters, but its present life is open and patent to all.

One may always safely follow the light that leads up; the way on which the heart is enlarged, the sympathies broadened and the spirit ennobled may be trusted as the right way; we may know it can never be right to follow any guide or believe any statement that breeds selfishness, bitterness, hatred, envy, the unbrotherly spirit or that palsies the arm when it is stretched out to help.

We must strive for faith to trust the fruits of divine love and aspiration though the roots lie hid in mystery. We must follow the light that leads to larger love and more generous living. We must learn to trust the life of religion though we cannot trace all its letters.

Lesson I. Pictures of the Kingdom,
Matt. 13. 31-33, 44-52. Golden
Text, Rom. 14. 17.

Verse 31. Mustard seed—A proverbial emblem of an exceedingly small quantity. Not the timber lie. Many a man finds himself suddenly confronted with a noble truth, in the Bible or out of it, and is obliged to take an attitude toward it, either of receptivity or of refusal.

Selleth all—The man who is keen enough to recognize the unrivaled worth of salvation will experience only joy in paying the necessary price. The test of sincerity, in everyone who comes face to face with the truth, is simply whether he is willing to give all he has and is in order to make it his own. And surely, that which alone fully satisfies the longings of the human

THE PRICE OF A LIFE

I.

The crowded excursion steamer was passing the double line of warships at a goodly pace, and the "wash" it created was very considerable.

Many eyes were directed towards a small rowing boat that had ventured dangerously near. Suddenly a chorus of cries rang out for one of the curling waves, larger than its fellows, had swamped the little craft, the solitary occupant of which was seen struggling in the water.

A man on the steamer's after-deck swiftly tore off his coat and vest and, mounting the gunwale, sprang like a flash into the water. The steamer heeled over alarmingly as the passengers flocked to the side to watch the progress of the gallant attempt at rescue. The telegraph rang sharply in the engine-room; the paddle-wheels ceased revolving and then began to reverse; and a couple of lifebuoys hurtled through the air and splashed into the water not far behind the swimmer.

The man who had ventured within the danger zone was making fierce efforts to clutch at the overturned boat, but was failing at every endeavor. It became a race between the relentless water that threatened every moment to engulf him and his would-be rescuer.

Screams rang out from the steamer, where hysterical women watched the proceedings with frightened eyes and blanched faces, hoarse shouts from the men bidding the drowning man desist from wasting his strength in futile struggles. And all the while the swimmer, with long, rhythmical strokes, was steadily approaching him.

The tension amongst the excursionists on the steamer grew intense; it was a new experience to most of them—this witnessing of the life-and-death struggle of a fellow human being, and the efforts of another to defeat death. They held their breath as the swimmer cleaved his way through the last few yards of water, and then broke out into a great roar of enthusiastic plaudits.

For the drowning man was firmly grasped; his rescuer, treading water, was holding him with one strong hand whilst with the other he sought to secure a hold of the overturned craft. A boat, launched from the steamer, was already being pulled rapidly towards the spot; the rescuer was seen to succeed in attaining a grip of the other; danger was over.

And when the two, assisted by many willing hands, clambered on board the cheering increased in volume and could be heard far and wide over the waters of the Solent. The rescuer and the rescued were scrutinized with interest as they were conducted below by the captain.

The former was a man approaching middle age, wiry and athletically built, with deep-set, resolute eyes, and an iron-grey moustache. The latter was some ten of fifteen years his junior, who might have

... or covering them with con-sion before juries. There is no doubt "something" in his method, which consists in testing testimony by selecting suggestive words and inducing hesitancy and fear. It is very easy to astonish and impress college youths or girls by showing that the method actually works.

But the methods pursued in and by the officers of justice are also "psychological" and also effective—far more effective than any alleged substitute, in fact. As Francis L.
Wellman says in his new book,
"Day in Court," there are no methods for ascertaining truth and exposing falsehood that are superior to those in use in England and America. They involve the application of horse sense, of intelligence, experience of average men, knowledge of life and character, and no laboratory test will ever prove half so trustworthy in the long run.

No method is infallible. Errors will be made under any system, and much will depend on the skill and art of the "psychologist" who tries the given case. Not all lawyers are good examiners or cross-examiners, not all judges are good presiding officers; but not all professors of the new psychology are good psychologists. Let us bear in mind that it is no new proposal to invoke psychology in the detection of crime. There never was a time when psychology was not invoked and followed—though without the employment of high-sounding terms. Moliere's hero was surprised to hear that he had spoken
"prose" for forty years without knowing it; many laymen will be surprised to learn that they have practised psychology for years without knowing it, but it is a fact.
Not a few of our literary "discoveries" are due to changes of words rather of things.

BREAD.

Raisin Bread—One pint of water, one pint of sweet milk, two ounces of sugar, one ounce of salt, two ounces of lard, one and one-half ounces of compressed yeast, two pounds of seeded raisins, four pounds of flour, white or whole wheat. Have milk and water warm.
Dissolve yeast in warm water, mix dough thoroughly. Let dough rise well, then knead again and set it aside, mold in round loaves, and when potatoe bake in hot oven.
When potatoe yeast is used use one pint of milk or water.

A REAL HUSTLER.

Lady (to applicant)—"Yes, I advertised for a maid of all work. Are you an early riser?"

Applicant—"Indade, an Oi am, mum. At me last place Oi was up an' had breakfast ready and the dishes washed an' put away an' all the beds made before anybody else in the house was up."

The average man can't understand why he has enemies.

It is hard to keep the man down who is able to keep up appearances.

Lesson I. Pictures of the Kingdom.
Matt. 13. 31-3, 44-52. Golden
Text, Rom. 14. 17.

Verse 31. Mustard seed—A proverbial emblem of an exceedingly small quantity. Not the timber tree, but the black mustard, a garden herb, sown annually, is referred to.

32. Less than all seeds—Not, of course, literally so; rather by popular estimation, since in ordinary gardening no smaller seed was ever sown. "Small as a mustard seed" was a common Jewish saying, in which was exercised the poetic license often found in the proverb.

When it is grown—The impression is not of rapid development, but of the contrast between the insignificant origin and the mature product. The Christian believer can afford to wait until the seed is grown.

Greater than the herbs—It towers above the pulse, parsley, and mint ("ten feet high, drawn up amongst brushes, and not thicker than whipcord"; "as tall as the horse and his rider"), so that, to all intents, it has the appearance of a tree.

The birds . . . come and lodge—
An Old Testament expression for the spread of a great kingdom, giving shelter to many (Ezek. 31. 6; Dan. 4. 9-18). The application of the parable is self-evident. From a period of precarious life amidst persecutions and toils, the kingdom of heaven has gradually enlarged its sway till it has become a worldwide protector of the poor and oppressed, and a power that can no longer be neglected in any of the councils of men. During the nineteenth century the number of the adherents of Christianity increased more than in all the preceding centuries of the Christian era.

33. Leaven—The fermented dough, lightens it. Scientists have discovered that this effect is produced by tiny living organisms spread through the leaven in large numbers. Inasmuch as leaven gives a disagreeable taste and odor to the bread, yeast is now much more commonly used.

Three measures—No significance attaches to the number. The seah was the recognized unit of measurement especially in the case of dry substances. It was equal to about one peck and a half.

Till it was all leavened—This took place by the influence of the leaven, first upon the particles near where it was hid, then, through these, upon all the rest. Such is the persuasive influence of true Christianity upon the life of mankind. Beginning with Christ, it has spread through the apostles, then through the early church, gradually working to transform the entire mass. The meal is the whole complex life of men, art, commerce, letters, religion. The Christian disciple must bring to bear upon all these the force of his leavening faith and love, and penetrate them with his ideals.

44. A treasure hidden in the field —In the East it was not unusual for men to conceal their wealth in this way, because of the uncertain tenure of property. Often, because of the vicissitudes of life, the wealth would remain unclaimed in its hiding place.

A man found—His coming by sheer accident upon the treasure, without seeking at all, is true to only joy in paying the necessary price. The test of sincerity, in everyone who comes face to face with the truth, is simply whether he is willing to give all he has and is in order to make it his own. And surely, that which alone fully satisfies the longings of the human heart, and fills up the whole measure of being, warrants the surrender of all those things which do not, and never can, satisfy.

Buyeth that field—It is easy to ask foolish questions in the interpretation of a parable. Here, for example, one may ask: "Can one purchase membership in the heavenly kingdom? Was it right for the man to hide the treasure before going to buy the field?" No parable is to be interpreted to the remotest detail. Certainly, salvation is not a commercial commodity, and if the man's conduct seems like shrewd practice, it is only on the fringes of the story. The essential thing is, that he was eager to act toward that treasure as any man ought to act in the presence of great spiritual opportunity—he joyfully parted with what was of small account in order to become owner of what, comparatively, was of infinite account.

45. A merchant seeking—He represents the man who devotes his life to the diligent quest of truth.

Goodly pearls—There is a certain beauty and lustre to other religions, but they have no absolute value; and if a man is in deadly earnest to find the best, he will not stop with them.

46. Found one pearl of great price—The end of all life is to find for oneself this gem of solitary splendor. What was the price? All that he had. Was it too high? It is no less for any of us. Life eternal is a jewel of such transcendent rarity, that nothing else will match it except the unwitholding renunciation of a human being.

47. A net—The seine, or dragnet, which is often worked by fastening one end to the shore and carrying the other end out to sea in a wide circle and afterward bringing it to the starting point, thus inclosing all the fish of every kind, as in the world are men of every type and condition. Until the final disposition of all, the good and bad freely mingle.

49. The end of the world—As in the case of the tares, the angels are the agents of judgment.

52. Every scribe—By his use of parabolic teaching Jesus has shown how the disciples may become teachers and give apt instruction in the things of the kingdom. Like a householder, who takes out of his chest old things and new, so they are to present to men not only the old truth in the old way but both old and new in a new way, like their Master presenting all truth through the vehicle of commonplace facts and experiences of life and nature

A FEW EXCEPTIONS.

"The course of true love never runs smooth," remarked the maid with the quotation habit.

"Oh, I don't know," rejoined the scanty-haired bachelor. "It doesn't always end in marriage."

HIS DEFINITION.

"Pa, what's a nocturnal combat?"

"Stay up to-night until I get home from club and watch your ma and I."

were conducted below by the captain.

The former was a man approaching middle age, wiry and athletically built, with deep-set, resolute eyes, and an iron-grey moustache.

The latter was some ten of fifteen years his junior, who might have been anything between thirty and thirty-five years of age, of fine build, and with regular, intellectual features. Admiring glances were cast at each as they disappeared from view.

A little later the eyes of the two men met.

"I've got to thank you more than I know how!" the younger said, trying to conceal his emotion. "It was cramp—the first attack I have ever had, though I'm no stranger to the water either. I'm not a coward, but there was a particular reason why I shouldn't care to 'go under' just now!"

"That's all right," the other said, in abrupt, off-hand tones;
"don't say any more, there's a good chap. I'm only too pleased to have been of service, and really it's quite a nice day for a swim!"

"I'll only say this, sir," the rescued man returned, with earnest warmth, "I don't as yet know who you are or whether you're even likely to need a friend, but if at any time you do there's nothing—absolutely nothing—short of anything dishonorable, of course—that I wouldn't do for you. Remember that, sir, will you. Here's my card!" And he produced one from the case he drew from his dripping waistcoat.

As he glanced at the card, which bore the name of "Norman Ravenscroft," the elder man gave a curious little start as though he had been struck by a sudden and uncommon idea; for a moment or two a strange expression lurked in his eyes as he scrutinized the man whose life he had saved.

"Thanks!" he said. "Are you married?" he added, in his abrupt way.

"No, but—"

The sentence remained unfinished, for at that moment the steward came to the cabin with a couple of spare suits he had contrived to find, and which the two drenched men would have to make shift with until they could reach their respective hotels.

"I'm not as active as I was in my younger days," the rescuer remarked, reflectively, a little later,
"but I'm not too rusty to do a sprint in the water when necessary.
I suppose I can give you," he remarked, after a slight pause, and regarding his companion critically as he spoke, "some fifteen years or so, eh? I'm just fifty."

"Your activity is remarkable," said the other, as I have good reason to know," the other rejoined. "As a matter of fact, you can give me sixteen years; I shall be thirty-four on the 15th of this month."

Again Norman Ravenscroft's rescuer started; he turned away a little, so that Ravenscroft did not see the remarkable change that had come over his features. For a second or so he was as a man laboring under some strong emotion, but when he again spoke his voice was calm and his expression as before.

"By the way," he observed, calmly, "though it's not my habit to accept a return of any sort for service rendered, and certainly not for one that a dozen others on board could probably have performed as easily as I, it happens that you may be able to do me an exceedingly good turn, and, if so, I'll hold you to your word. You're not likely to go back on it, are you?" He added the last words with a sudden new incisiveness.

"I've never broken my word since I've been old enough to understand the meaning of giving it," the other replied earnestly and with dignity. Then, returning to his former warmth of manner, went on: "I shall be but too grateful to you for affording me the opportunity of repaying a part at least of the debt. If you will let me know—"

"Here's my card," the elder man said, glancing at the other's as he handed him his own inscribed with the name "Bryce Ruthwell," and an address at Regent's Park, and with the name of a Cowes hotel scribbled beneath. "If you could find it convenient to call this evening I can see you at any hour suitable to you."

"I will do so with the greatest of pleasure," was the prompt reply. "And I hope you will then call me unreservedly in what way I can be of service to you!"

"I will be quite candid!" came the response, with a certain grim flavor about it.

II.

Punctually at the hour arranged, Norman Ravenscroft presented himself at Mr. Ruthwell's hotel and was shown into his private sitting room. The men gripped hands warmly.

Coffee and cigars having been brought, Ruthwell plunged into his subject without delay.

"If you've no objection I'll tell you a story, Mr. Ravenscroft," he began.

"I can promise you will have a most attentive listener," remarked Ravenscroft, who found himself becoming much interested in the uncommon personality of the man to whom he owed his life. Ruthwell sipped his coffee and began:

"A few years ago I quarreled with an extremely wealthy aunt, whose heir I then was. She promptly altered her will, leaving the whole of her property to charities. I allowed some little time to elapse and then approached her on the subject very discreetly, pointing out that the harshness of her action would fall chiefly on my daughter Nora, who had been brought up in an atmosphere of luxury, and had always been regarded as the eventual possessor of her great-aunt's property. The old lady, obviously somewhat impressed by my arguments, which I took care to express as delicately as possible, promised to reconsider the matter. Subsequently she informed me that she had made another will, with Nora, on certain conditions, as her principal legatee.

"A few weeks ago she died, and until then I had no idea of what the conditions were. They were apparently prohibitive, and probably were meant to be such. I secured counsel's opinion on the possibility of successfully contesting the will, but it was so discouraging that I abandoned any idea of doing so. It was evident that, although my aunt was eccentric, she was perfectly sane when she signed the document.

"Nora was to have three-fourths of the property and I one-fourth, on condition that within three months of the testator's demise she married a man born on a certain self—this contest between the love that had come swiftly and potently into his life and the deep sense of duty towards him to whom he owed that life. He had given his word; to break it would brand him as a coward and a liar.

On the other hand, would it be honorable to break his engagement with Margery? He supposed so, if she agreed—as he guessed she would—that he ought to do this thing.

He felt tempted to open his mind to Ruthwell, but checked the impulse. It would be a scurvy trick to thus tacitly express his aversion to the suggestion, and it would probably serve no useful purpose. Ruthwell was keen, very keen, on frustrating his aunt's spite; time was short, and he, Ravenscroft, was his last hope.

Suddenly his resolve was made; he turned abruptly before he could waver. Mr. Ruthwell could not conceal the acuteness of his suspense.

"I will do as you ask, providing of course, that Miss Ruthwell accepts me."

"She has promised—that is sufficient. I thank you, Ravenscroft, and—here's my hand."

In the joy he could not conceal, Ruthwell did not appear to notice the tense expression on the face of the younger man—the outcome of his secret struggle and his renunciation of happiness with her he loved so well.

"I shall be returning to London to-morrow, and will inform Nora of what has happened. You had better be introduced to each other—say, to-morrow afternoon. You have my London address. A special license will, of course, be necessary; I trust you to attend to that part of the business. You must arrange with Nora where you would like the ceremony to take place."

"It shall be as you wish, sir. I conclude that you anticipate no opposition on Miss Ruthwell's part."

Bryce Ruthwell shook his head.

"We Ruthwells are at present poor, but we are proud, like yourself, and never break a pledge once given."

Ravenscroft had felt inclined to cling to the desperate hope that Nora Ruthwell herself might, by a point-blank refusal to become his wife, release him from his obligation. But he dismissed it as unworthy of him, and her father's words told him that in any case it was a futile one.

"I hope you'll grow to love each other," Ruthwell said as Ravenscroft prepared to take his departure. "You'll be good to her, won't you?"

Ravenscroft gulped down something that rose in his throat; a vision of Margery Seville had risen up before him.

"Yes, I shall be good to her, sir!" he said, speaking with difficulty.

And then he went.

III.

Norman Ravenscroft, grave-faced and with a deadly pain clutching at his heart, left by the next boat to Southampton, whence he journeyed to London. Arrived at his chambers he wrote the following note to Margery:—

My darling.—It is with difficulty that I write this. I must force

"It means," she said, as she moved to where he stood and put her arms about his neck, "that I am the girl you are to marry. I am Nora Ruthwell!"

At first he could not bring himself to realize what this revelation meant, but after a moment of wondering astonishment he snatched her into his arms and held her as though he would never let her leave them again.

"It was my fault," she said, when a little later they sat, their arms entwined about each other, talking over the extraordinary events of the past few hours. "I never regarded that silly will really seriously, and looked on it merely as a trick of aunt's to tantalize poor father and myself. I did not even remember the details, and never connected you with the date and initials mentioned in it. And when I suggested in fun that I shouldn't tell you my real name until—the banns were to be published, or anything else about myself except that I had a dear kind dad who would like you directly he met you, and whom I wanted to give a nice surprise to, I didn't think it would give you such a bad few hours as you have had!"

"It's worth the 'bad few hours' to have the present and the future ones," he observed. "And the banns won't be necessary after all, will they? Do you realize that you will be my wife in two days' time?"

She hid her face upon his shoulder and his arms tightened around her.—London Tit-Bits.

FORTUNES FOR FEASTS.

Expensive Palates in the Earlier Days.

The food fads, about which so many members of society have gone almost crazy, recall the food fads—quite different in their essence—of olden days. From time immemorial wealthy epicures have not hesitated to spend large sums on single meals for themselves and a select and limited number of friends.

For instance, there are on record some nice little repasts indulged in by the Roman gourmands. Adelius Verus gave a banquet to a dozen guests, which must have been a sight for gods and men, seeing that it cost, if reckoned in our money, more than $240,000. The Emperor Vitellius once entertained his brother Lucius to a dainty "snack" which ran away with something like $200,000. This latter feast could not have been a meager affair when it is considered that among the courses were 2,000 different sorts of fish and 7,000 varieties of fowl.

It is said that the equivalent of something like $40,000,000 was spent by Apicius Coelius during his lifetime, merely in continual tickling of the palate. He committed suicide when his extravagance in eating and drinking and in other directions had reduced his income to about $400,000 a year, a sum on which he imagined he could not be happy.

In modern times the art of feeding has been by no means neglected; but who would care to sit down to a banquet such as that organized by Geoffrey St. Hilaire during the siege of Paris? After swallowing a consommé de cheval de millet the company partook of minced

WHAT MAKES GOOD OATS.

A grain of oats is made up of two main parts; the outside or hull, and the inside or kernel. Another name commonly applied to the kernel is the meat. It is the kernel that we are mainly interested in, because this is the nourishing part of the grain. The chief use of the hull is to protect the tiny oat plant within, and to preserve the stored-up food material for its future use.

As a food for stock, and as an article of human diet, oats take a high rank. Since the value of the grain depends so much upon the part which is of little use for food consumers of oats in any form whatever should be interested in the relationship existing between the hull and the meat. The oats is always grown from for its meat; the hull is generally regarded as a necessary evil by the stockman and the miller. The range of hull in oats is from 20 to 48 per cent., 30 per cent. is the average. Oats have the largest percentage of hull to kernel of any of our grains. Barley comes next with an average of 15 per cent. The percentage of hull to meat depends largely upon the variety. For example the Jeanette oat generally averages 23 pounds of hull from every hundred pounds of grain, while the Banner gives thirty pounds of hull, and the Fifty Pound Black 40 pounds. This simply means that by purchasing one hundred pounds of Jeanette oats the buyer gets seventeen pounds more of the most valuable part of the oat grain than he would get were he to purchase the same weight of Fifty Pound Black—a gain surely worth consideration.

The difference in the proportion of the two main parts of the oat grain accounts for the fact, observed by all feeders, that horses will often do as well on three pecks of one variety as on four pecks of another. As a rule, grains high in hull are such that the nutriment they do possess is not so fully extracted by the animals. The relative proportion of hull and meat in any oats can be determined roughly by removing the hull from fifteen or twenty representative grains and then comparing the amount of hull with the meat. Varieties also may be compared in this way. Aside from the question of variety, the two principal factors which influence the proportion of the parts under consideration are: The time at which the oats were sown, and the time they are harvested. Late-sown oats are usually high in hull, and the same holds true of oats cut before maturity. Last year a plot of oats cut in the milk stage ran 84 per cent. hull, while an adjoining plot of the same variety which has been handled in exactly the same way, excepting that it had been allowed to ripen perfectly before cutting, ran only 28 per cent.

fectly sane when she signed the document.

"Nora was to have three-fourths of the property and I one-fourth, on condition that within three months of the testator's demise she married a man born on a certain date and whose names began with certain initials. In view of the legal opinion, I determined to make a desperate effort to enable Nora to fulfil the conditions. I've advertised far and wide—wording the announcements in a very careful and veiled manner, of course—and I've had many replies. Some of the writers were not prepared with the necessary birth certificate; others were obviously mere down-at-heel adventurers; others, for various reasons, were equally impossible. The three months expire in four days' time."

Mr. Ruthwell paused.
"What of your daughter, Mr. Ruthwell? How does she view the matter?"

"Her attitude is somewhat curious. She readily gave me her promise, should I find the man I sought—one fulfilling the conditions and yet suitable in birth, character, and refinement to be my daughter's husband—to marry him if he should ask her to be his wife. The fact is, she seems fully convinced that no one answering the conditions will be found. She is entirely reconciled to the idea of the charities benefiting by the half-million that's approximately the figure at stake. Unfortunately, my private means have been extremely limited of late, owing to some heavy losses, and very pluckily, though much against my will, Nora has taken up a profession in which she chances to have ability, refusing to be what she calls a burden on me."

Again Mr. Ruthwell paused, and this time he regarded his visitor fixedly.

"A strange but interesting story, sir," Ravenscroft observed, just a trifle disconcerted by the other's steady gaze. "And what will be the most interesting part to me is yet to come. In what way can I assist you in the matter?"

"Your initials are those imposed in the conditions—the same as Nora's; you were born on the specified day; you are unmarried, of good birth, refined and honorable. I've not been a student of human nature for nothing, Ravenscroft. Now do you see how you can assist me?"

Before Ruthwell had concluded Ravenscroft realized what it was that was being suggested to him, and without a word, his lips tightly set, he rose and walked to the window, whence he gazed out across the blue waters of the Solent. He did not wish Mr. Ruthwell to see his face just then.

There was beautiful Margery Seville, the dainty, pure-eyed little lady who had sprung into fame a few weeks back, almost upon her debut on the stage, who was to be his wife within a few brief weeks. He loved her passionately; to relinquish her seemed unthinkable. And yet he owed his life to this man, and he had given him his word that there was absolutely nothing short of anything dishonorable he would not do for him should he ask it. Ruthwell was set upon the acquisition of this fortune on his daughter's behalf. Would not Margery herself be the first to urge him to repay the debt in the manner he asked?

It was a terrible fight within him.

to Southington, whence he journeyed to London. Arrived at his chambers he wrote the following note to Margery:—

My darling.—It is with difficulty that I write this. I must force myself to the task whilst I am able. Something has come between us and I must ask you to release me from our engagement. If I am to act honorably I must be free.

To-day I was sailing in the Solent and the wash of a steamer upset the boat. Seized with cramp I was in danger; a gentleman sprang overboard from the vessel and saved me just in time. In the depth of my gratitude I promised him to do anything he might ask in return.

In the course of our subsequent conversation he chanced to learn the date of my birth, and in this and other ways I happen to fulfil the requirements of an eccentric will. In brief, the price I have to pay for my life is to marry his daughter; this must be within four days from now.

I felt it impossible to explain this personally; we had better go out of each other's lives entirely. What I am suffering and shall suffer you can't guess. I shall, as will be my duty, strive to thrust away the memory of your dear face, but it will be the most difficult task of my life. —Yours brokenly, Norman.

Having read it through, he took a taxi-cab to the theatre, where she was attracting a full house every night.

"Be sure to give that to Miss Seville as she leaves," he told the stage-doorkeeper.

After a sleepless night he attempted to eat his breakfast, but he could not. Life, until yesterday, so bright and full of hope, seemed very sombre now.

Pushing away his omelette, he took up the morning paper and listlessly read the account of the incident of the day before, headed, "Sensational Rescue in the Solent." He was glad that Ruthwell was accorded a full measure of praise for his brave act, but otherwise it had no interest for him. He almost wished the waters had covered over his head and defeated the gallant attempt.

There was a double rat-tat at the door below, but it did not interest him. A few moments later his man entered with a telegram. Mechanically he opened it.

"Come at once to 114, Lester Avenue Gardens," he read. There was no signature—not even an initial. It was the address given by Bryce Ruthwell.

Suddenly his interest deepened; it was just possible that something had happened that might release him from his compact. And then—Margery! But though he hastened to set out, he strove to stifle the new-born hope. If he allowed it to grow, and it proved groundless, the reaction would be but the harder to bear.

It did not take him long to reach 114, Lester Avenue Gardens. He was shown into a tastefully-appointed reception-room; there was nothing in the servant's demeanor to denote the happening of any untoward event.

He heard a light step on the threshold, the door opened, and Margery entered, her eyes bright with love and happiness. Ravenscroft was astounded.

"You here, Margie! My darling, what does it mean?"

ing has been by no means neglected; but who would care to sit down to a banquet such as that organized by Geoffrey St. Hillare during the siege of Paris? After swallowing a consommé de cheval de mulet the company partook of minced cat, stewed rats, grilled dog's liver and plum pudding.

The feast seems to have been a great success, for it is on record that "the soup was perfect, the dog's liver tasted like sheep's kidneys, the minced cat resembled veal, the rat stew was very good and reminded the guests of boiled chicken."

Rats, by the way, are described as an exquisite form of nourishment, which is an obiter dictum to which many have agreed, notably a famous naturalist, the late Frank Buckland. He used to swear by roast alligator, which he declared was more succulent even than boiled boa constrictor, one of his most prized dishes, and this in turn he preferred to the finest veal.

FELL 130 FEET AND LIVES.

At Salcombe, Devonshire, England, recently, a student named Rawland, with a companion, attempted to descend an almost perpendicular cliff of 200 feet high. About a third of the way down, the place where Mr. Rawland was standing crumbled beneath him, and he fell to the water's edge. Yet, medical examination later revealed that he had sustained no vital injury or broken bones, although his body was badly cut and bruised and most of his clothing and the soles of his boots were torn off.

Any unfavorable condition of soil or season which tends to stunt the plant or retard the proper filling of the grain will also cause a higher per cent of hull. From the force going it may appear that the ideal oat would be the hull-less one. But you have noted that the hull serves to protect the future plant and its supply of food material. It is claimed also that there is a relationship between percentage of hull and strength of straw—a long percentage of hull generally going with a fine, weak straw. This contention seems to be borne out in the case of the Jeanette, but the heavy-hulled Fifty Pound Black is found to have straw which is soft and brittle.

We may conclude that the most desirable oat, other things being equal, is the one with the lowest percentage of hull.—L. S. Klineh, McDonald College, St. Anne De Bellevue.

QUALITY AND COST.

There is this one striking difference between the products of the farm and those of the manufacturing establishments. The manufacturer governs the price of the goods he has to sell by the cost of production. A cloth manufacturer, for example, will turn out several classes of goods which he will sell at several different prices and will make the same profit from each of them. Why? Because there is a difference in the cost of production. For instance, he can afford to sell shoddy goods, for a great deal less than the genuine articles simply because the raw material in the one case costs a great deal less than it does in the other, and he makes as much money in producing the one as the other. It is quite different with the farmer. Go through the various products of the farm—live stock, grain crops, dairy or fruit products. They tell the same story. The cost of producing the inferior article will be as great as the cost of producing prime quality. But the one will sell for very much more than the other. It is quality and not cost of production that governs the price of farm products.

THE MISTAKES OF A NIGHT.

He saw her sitting in the dark corner and knew that his chance had come.

Noiselessly he stole up behind her, and before she was aware of his presence, he had kissed her.

"How dare you?" she shrieked.

"Pardon me," he bluffed, readily—"I thought you were my sister."

She stepped out into the light. "You silly fool!" she giggled, "I am!"

He fainted.

WHY BACKS ACHE

The Kidneys Seldom to Blame—
The Trouble Due to Blood Impurities

There is more nonsense talked about backache than any other disease. Some people have been frightened into the belief that every backache means deadly kidney trouble. That is utter rubbish. As a matter of scientific fact not one backache in twenty has anything to do with the kidneys. Most backaches come from sheer weakness and kidney drugs can't possible cure that. You need something to brace you up and give you new strength and that is exactly what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will do. Other backaches are really muscular rheumatism, and Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have cured the worst cases of rheumatism by driving the poisonous acid out of the blood. Other backaches are the symptoms of ordinary ailments such as influenza, indigestion, constipation and liver complaint. In women backaches often come from the troubles that follow so surely on any weakness or irregularity in the usual blood supply. The one way to cure these backaches is to strike at the root of the trouble with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which enrich the blood and bring strength to aching backs and weak nerves. Mr. Alex. Cockburn, Deloraine, Man., says: "About three years ago I suffered terribly from backache. I consulted a doctor and took his medicine, and wore a plaster, but did not get the least relief. Then I got a belt, but this was as useless as the other treatment, and my suffering still continued. Then one of my friends asked me why I did not try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I got a box. Before they were all used there was some improvement in my condition and I got three boxes more. By the time I had taken these all the signs of the pain had gone, and as it has not since returned I feel that the cure is permanent. My only regret is that I did not hear of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills sooner, for not only would I have got rid of the pain sooner, but would also have saved some twenty-five dollars uselessly spent in other treatments."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all dealers in medicine or may be had by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

CHILD BEGGARS IN PARIS.

Parents Hire Out Children to Professional Beggars.

Sometimes, even in France, we do a little good, writes a Paris correspondent. Here is an instance: For some time the number of child beggars has been increasing in alarming proportions, and the result of enquiries made showed that certain servants profited by the absence of their masters to hire young children from professional beggars and exploit them. Even parents "let out" their own children. The Prefect of Police, however, has taken steps to put an end to this disgraceful state of things, and gave orders that all young chil-

"Yes," said the banker mischievously. "You detest him because he believed with myself that M. de Carnoel had been meddling with my safe. It is time to put an end to the false idea you persist in maintaining. This man is unworthy of you."

"You have told me so before, and I have refused to believe it. And Maxime does not, either," she added.

"Maxime! Ask him what he thinks of M. de Carnoel."

Alice said nothing, but her eyes sought her cousin's face, questioning. Maxime colored and made no reply.

"Come! speak!" cried his uncle. "Assure this foolish girl that my former secretary is associated with a band of rascals. You have just told me his exploits and drawn your own conclusions from them. I hope you do not mean to retract before my daughter."

"No," murmured Maxime, "for, unfortunately, I have advanced nothing but the truth."

"What!" murmured poor Alice. "You, too—you abandon him—you, who declared to me only yesterday—"

"Yesterday I was persuaded he was innocent. To-day I am obliged to recognize that I was mistaken."

"What has happened since yesterday?"

"I saw M. de Carnoel taking flight with a woman who is certainly a thief."

"A woman!" repeated Mlle. Dorgeres, sorrowfully.

"Yes, a woman, my dear Alice, and what a woman! one who is engaged in the service of revolutionaries of the lowest order."

"And you affirm that he fled with her? Fled! why should he fly? He has, then, been arrested?"

"I beg you, my dear Alice, not to insist in knowing all the details of this affair, but be satisfied when I tell you on my honor and my conscience that M. de Carnoel has been guilty of acts which create between him and you an impassable abyss. You may believe me, for I defended him when I believed it possible, and I have no interest in ruining him."

"It is well," said Alice, with effort. "where is he?"

"Where is he!" exclaimed M. Dorgeres. "It is not your intention. I hope, to run after him?"

"I want to know where he is."

"You are absolutely bent upon it?" asked Maxime, desirous to make an end of this; "well, he is at this woman's."

"Prove to me that you are not lying."

"How shall I prove it? I can not take you there, can I? But I shall see him myself this evening—I shall see his contemptible regoing to set everything to rights, overwhelm M. Dorgeres with joy, bring Alice to right views, and reassure his friend Vignory. And M. Dorgeres had just been subjected to a heartrending scene, Alice talked of dying, Vignory went away anxious.

But there remained one last card to play.

Maxime was not the dupe of the sentiments his cousin had expressed with so much violence. Hope was still living in the bottom of her breaking heart, and she was resolved to cherish her liberty, because she believed the hour would come for the reinstating of the betrothed of her choice.

It was only necessary to tear from her this last illusion. And Madame Yalta alone could do that. He was impatient to see her, to acquaint her with what he had discovered concerning Robert de Carnoel, and if he could have hoped to find her at home would have run. But Dr. Villagos had told him the countess would be absent for twenty-four hours, and he must postpone his visit to the next day.

Where should he go? He hardly knew, and took mechanically the route to Rue de Chateaudun, when, in turning into the Boulevard Malesherbes, it occurred to him to go and inquire for Georget.

On reaching Monceaux Park, he turned aside to take a look at Colonel Borisoff's house. He ascertained that the Russian agent had spoken truly. His servants were engaged in storing away baggage in a wagon.

"A pleasant journey to him," murmured Maxime, "and may he never return."

He followed Rue de Vigny to its terminus, and, plunged in his reflections, was crossing the Boulevard de Courcelles when a cry met his ears and roused him from his reverie. Raising his head, he saw a horse whose breast nearly touched him—a horse attached to an elegant victoria and driven by a woman who, with rare skill, had just succeeded in arresting a blooded animal in full speed. Maxime sprang aside quickly, and was about to apologize when he recognized Madame Yalta bent backward and pulling on the reins to restrain her trotter. She had very nearly crushed a man who would willingly die for her, but in another fashion.

"You!" she exclaimed, turning pale at thought of the danger he had escaped.

"You!" exclaimed Maxime, amazed at this unlooked-for meeting. The two monosyllables crossed each other.

Maxime did not require a second late to you. I was witness to strange scenes which took place in this very Rue Joffroy, and M. de Carnoel played the principal part."

"You were present, you say?" "By a concurrence of strange circumstances I saw all, and am certain that M. de Carnoel is the lover and accomplice of a worthless creature."

"And you told Villagos what you saw?" asked the countess, in a husky voice.

"No. But whether he saw it himself, whether his friend informed him of it, or whether he divined what I wished to hide—I believe he knows all."

"And I—I know what awaits me," murmured the countess. She had spoken low, nevertheless, Maxime caught the words which revealed that a danger menaced her.

"What do you mean?" he cried.

"Nothing. Go on, I beg. You have just asserted that M. de Carnoel is a wretch. The doctor is of your opinion, I suppose."

"Yes, or rather I am of his. After having seen this Carnoel rescued by a knave I doubted still. It pained me to recognize the fact that you were interested in an unworthy man. The doctor removed my last doubts. He informed me of what this Carnoel did after quitting Rue Joffroy. I should have begun by telling you why he was in the house and by whom he was brought there, but—"

"It is useless, tell me the rest."

"Well, madame, since you wish first to know the end of this sad story, know that Carnoel followed his mistress and she has taken him to a house where he still remains with her."

"And Villagos knows the house?"

"Perfectly."

"You believe it?"

"Why should I not believe it? The doctor has offered to take me there. We are to go with his friend this evening—or rather to-night. I am to meet them in the Champs Elysees."

"You shall not go. I forbid it."

"May I ask why?" said Maxime, surprised and at the same time charmed at the countess' tone. She would not have spoken in this imperative had she been indifferent to him.

"Because you would be rushing to your death," she replied quickly.

"To my death?"

"Villagos wishes to draw you into a trap. You will not return alive if you follow him this night."

"What interest has the doctor in making away with me?" he asked, smiling.

SICKLY BABIES QUICKLY CURED.

The sickly baby is quickly cured by Baby's Own Tablets. These Tablets are a never failing cure for the troubles arising from a disordered condition of the stomach and bowels. Being sold under a guarantee to contain no harmful drug they can be given to the youngest child with perfect safety. Mrs. Francis McMullen, St. Octave, Que., writes: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets for my baby who was constipated for four or five days at a time. I found the Tablets to be of great benefit and would recommend them to other mothers." They are sold by medicine dealers young children from professional beggars and exploit them. Even parents "let out" their own children. The Prefect of Police, however, has taken steps to put an end to this disgraceful state of things, and gave orders that all young children found begging were to be taken to a special shelter. Those among them who are old enough to understand the evil of begging, but who are forced to it by their parents, are to be placed under proper control.

Some of the younger ones were so delighted with the shelter provided for them that, when released and turned into the streets to beg by their owners or hirers, they immediately returned to their refuge and wished to stay. M. Lepine is to be congratulated on his prompt and merciful action in this matter.

Flora—"I like you as a friend, Mr. Jenks, but I could never marry you. Have I made myself perfectly plain?" Jenks—"Well, you may have had something to do with it, but I should say that Nature was the chief offender."

Through indiscretion in eating green food in summer many children become subject to cholera morbus caused by irritating acids, that act violently on the lining of the intestines. Pains and dangerous purgatives ensue and the delicate system of the child suffers under the strain. In such cases the safest and surest medicine is Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial. It will check the inflammation and save the child's life.

"To die!" exclaimed the father. "You love me no longer that you talk of dying. What have I done that you should break my heart?"

"No," said Alice, throwing herself into her father's arms. "I have not ceased to love you; but forgive me if I have not the courage to live."

She burst into tears and sobbed aloud.

Her father received her in his arms, and Maxime, almost as much moved, bent his head to conceal his agitation.

"Speak," cried M. Dorgeres. "Help me to make her understand that she is wrong to afflict me so; that she has not the right to grieve my old age by refusing to marry."

"Never," said Alice, disengaging herself from her father's arms. "I may promise to force myself to be resigned; I cannot promise to forget. But I swear to you never to pronounce the name of the man I have loved; and I ask it of you, my father, of you, Maxime. It is not much to exact."

"Do not fear that we will revert to this sad subject," replied M. Dorgeres, who had recovered a little his composure, and felt the necessity of putting an end to a painful scene. "You will remain mistress of your own will, my dear child. Wisdom will return to you, perhaps, and I will wait for it. And now will you wait for me in the dining-room? I have a few words to say to your cousin."

Alice offered him her forehead, and went out without pressing the hand of her cousin, who understood well why she treated him less affectionately than usual.

By way of compensation, she had no sooner disappeared than her father exclaimed:

"My boy, I give you back my esteem. You have been firm, and without you I do not know what I should have done with that wayward girl."

"Alas! I fear my firmness has not changed the situation."

"You are mistaken. The blow has struck home. Time will do the rest. If you can finish what you have so well begun—"

"Cure her! I should ask nothing better. However, there is, perhaps one means. Will you allow me to see Alice when I wish, and with whom I wish?"

"Certainly."

"Then I am going."

"When shall I see you again?"

"When I have succeeded."

And he descended the stairway, saying to himself:

"It is only the countess who can convert Alice."

CHAPTER VIII.

Maxime left the house of his uncle a little more perplexed than he had entered it.

On his arrival he fancied he was amazed at this woman's meeting. The two monosyllables crossed each other.

Maxime did not require a second invitation. He took his place by Madame Yalta's side, and the fiery animal filed off like a cannon ball.

"I was so terrified," said the countess; "a step more and you would have been under the feet of my horse."

"I owe you my life, and the joy of seeing you again would have consoled me if I had been wounded. I resigned myself with difficulty to postponing my visit till to-morrow and here you are back again!"

"Back again? what do you mean? I went out for an hour only and was returning to wait for you."

"You did not leave Paris this morning for a chateau some distance in the country?"

"Why, no."

"How was it, then, Dr. Villagos told me—"

"You have seen him?"

"Yes, he came to see me this morning for the first time, at my house."

"What did he say? speak! tell me!"

"He—I hardly know where to begin," stammered Maxime, astonished that the countess showed so much impatience. "He said so many things."

"About me?"

"He repeated that your state of health required great care, and recommended me as usual not to abuse the interviews granted me."

"He asked you not to speak to me of M. de Carnoel?"

"Not positively, but from certain words he let fall I understood that he was aware that you were interesting yourself in his behalf."

"I hope you diverted him from the idea."

"I tried," replied Maxime, with embarrassment, "but I fear he persists in believing it. He has reasons that—"

"What reasons?"

"In walking with one of his friends he met this woman of whom I spoke to you—the associate of the woman who lost her hand in trying to open my uncle's safe."

"Well?"

"His friend knew, it seems, that this creature had been the mistress of Robert de Carnoel."

"It is not true. Villagos has lied."

"He asserts that he has proofs."

"What proofs?"

"Last night, events took place which I have been impatient to re-

KING EDWARD'S KINDNESS

Sympathy for Poor Hawker Saved Latter from Police.

One of the incidents that showed King Edward's kindly nature occurred at Longchamps, France, in May, 1903, when he and President Loubet were at the races together. Just before a big event of the day the King lowered the glasses through which he had been examining the horses at the starting post, and turning to one of the officials in the tribune, said:

"A poor woman over there seems to be having a bad time with the police. I wish you would be good enough to send over and order them to handle her more gently."

The object of the King's sympathy proved to be a hawker who had inadvertently strayed into one of the reserved enclosures, and was being hustled out with unnecessary violence.

Thanks to the King's intervention, she was allowed to remain until after the race, and then took her departure in peace.

NO USE FOR SMART SET.

King George and Queen Mary do not Care for Them.

As has been recorded already, neither the new King nor the Queen is credited with any liking for what is called the smart set. It is now recalled that last autumn Queen Mary was staying at a house party in the country which included three or four members of the ultra smart set, whose conversation at dinner was also ultra smart. The Princess, as she then was, participated very little in it. Afterward, when the ladies were in the drawing room, the Princess opened a workbag, drew from it a woollen sock and, taking her stand on the hearthrug, proceeded to knit.

For over an hour she remained stock still almost, absorbed in her work, and while she stood the ultra smart ladies, whose usual form would be liqueurs and cigarettes, had to stand too, until they were absolutely dead beat. The Queen, who resembles her great-grandmother, Queen Charlotte, so closely in appearance, has also, curiously enough, inherited the taste of that somewhat domineering and managing lady for standing for a long time after dinner.

A Safe Pill for Suffering Women.
—The secluded life of women which permits of little healthful exercise, is a fruitful cause of derangements of the stomach and liver and is accountable for the pains and lassitude that so many of them experience. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will correct irregularities of the digestive organs and restore health and vigor. The most delicate woman can use them with safety, because their action, while effective, is mild and soothing.

FORETHOUGHT.
"You are probably not aware, sir," said the angry father, "that last year my daughter spent $1,500 on her dress."
"Yes, I am," said the young man firmly. "I advised her to do it over a year ago, when we first became engaged."

cure many common ailments which are very different, but which all arise from the same cause—a system clogged with impurities. The Pills cause the bowels to move regularly, strengthen and stimulate the kidneys and open the pores of the skin. These organs immediately throw off the accumulated impurities, and Biliousness, Indigestion, Liver Complaints, Kidney Troubles, Headaches, Rheumatism and similar ailments vanish. SAVED IN HIS OLD AGE.
Annapolis, N.S., May 14, 1909.—I am over eighty years of age and have suffered from Kidney and Bladder Trouble for fifteen years. I took doctors' medicine but got no help. I want to thank you for sending me the sample box of Gin Pills which helped me.
I have taken six boxes of Gin Pills altogether, but got relief before I had taken near that amount. I had to get up some nights every fifteen minutes and had to use an instrument before I could urinate. Now I can lie in bed four or five hours without getting up.

"You must be very polite to succeed in this business," said a barber to his young apprentice. "Always wear a pleasant smile, and try to flatter everybody." "I'll do my best, sir," replied the apprentice; "but how am I to flatter a bald-headed man?" "Easily enough," replied the barber; "Just ask him if he doesn't want his hair cut."

No Alcohol In It.—Alcohol or any other volatile matter which would impair strength by evaporation does not in any shape enter into the manufacture of Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. Nor do climatic changes affect it. It is as serviceable in the Arctic Circle as in the Torrid Zone, perhaps more useful in the higher latitudes, where man is more subject to colds from exposure to the elements.

First New Woman—"Never more surprised in my life, dear, when I heard the news. What on earth made you marry—and such a man."
Second New Woman (apologetically)—"Well, dear, you see, I entertain a good deal, and you know I can't carve poultry a bit, and he can beautifully, and so—and so I married him."

A Pill That Lightens Life.—To the man who is a victim of indigestion the transaction of business becomes an added misery. He cannot concentrate his mind upon his tasks and loss and vexation attend him. To such a man Parmelee's Vegetable Pills offer relief. A course of treatment, according to directions, will convince him of their great excellence. They are confidently recommended because they will do all that is claimed for them.

ZAM-BUK SAVED THIS BABY

Mrs. M. Barrett,
505 Moreau St.,
Montreal, says:
"A horrid rash came out all over my baby's face and spread until it had totally covered his scalp. It was irritating and painful, and caused the little one hours of suffering. We tried soaps and powders and salves, but he got no better. He refused his food, got quite thin and worn, and was reduced to a very serious condition. I was advised to try Zam-Buk, and did so. It was wonderful how it seemed to cool and ease the child's burning, painful skin. Zam-Buk from the very commencement seemed to go right to the spot, and the pimples and sores and the irritation grew less and less. Within a few weeks my baby's skin was healed completely. He has now not a trace of rash, or eruption, or eczema, or burning sore. Not only so, but cured of the tormenting skin trouble, he has improved in general health."
Zam-Buk is sold at all stores and medicine vendors, 50c. a box, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price, 6 boxes for $2.50. A certain cure for all skin diseases, cuts, burns, etc., and for piles.

Falling Hair

Ayer's Hair Vigor promptly destroys the germs that cause falling hair. It nourishes the hair-bulbs, restores them to health. The hair stops falling out, grows more rapidly.

Dandruff

Ayer's Hair Vigor just as promptly destroys the germs that cause dandruff. It removes every trace of dandruff itself, and keeps the scalp clean and in a healthy condition.

Does not Color the Hair

We wish you to positively and distinctly understand that Ayer's Hair Vigor does not affect the color of the hair, even to the slightest degree. Persons with the whitest or the lightest and most delicate blond hair may use it freely without having the hair made a shade darker.

Ingredients: Sulphur, Glycerin, Quinin, Sodium Chloride, Capsicum, Sage, Alcohol, Water, Perfume.

MARBLE AND GRANITE MONUMENTS.

A Rather Dull Pearl.

There is an anecdote in J. A. Hamerton's "George Meredith In Anecdote and Criticism" which hints at the possibility of the great novelist's fountain of talk being sealed at times.

A lady who had friends in Surrey who were on terms of some intimacy with the novelist was greatly charmed on one occasion when visiting there to find that Meredith was to be one of the guests at dinner. She prepared herself for a rich ingathering of his celebrated flowers of witty talk. But he was singularly silent throughout the visit, and the only Meredithian phrase the lady could carry away with her was his remark when reaching across his neighbor for the salt: "Excuse the picnic stretch."

Gamboge.

Gamboge is one of the artist's most important yellows. It is the gum resin of a tree which bears yellow flowers and leathery, laurel-like leaves. The name of the pigment indicates the country from which it comes, for gamboge is simply a corruption of Cambaja or Cambodia. In this far eastern country the tree grows wild and sheds those sticky tears which help the artist to paint the sunrise and the autumn tints of the woods. Gamboge was brought to Europe by merchants from the east toward the end of the sixteenth century—London Answers.

Needless Fears.

The debonaire young man was patronizing the barber shop manicure. "Don't you know, the thought often strikes me when I'm getting shaved," he chattered, "what a terrible position I'd be in if the barber suddenly became a raving maniac!" "Oh, don't worry about that," said the lady sweetly. "I don't think anybody will ever go crazy over you."

Letter Boxes In France.

The modern French letter box has the shape of a pillar, profusely ornamented with the conventional lily. The whole box or stand is fashioned after a plant, and the top resembles a bird. The body is surrounded by floral wreaths or festoons, and the base is formed by large leaves. The boxes are placed against buildings and have a very pretty effect.

That's proof of our faith in this remedy, and it should indisputably demonstrate that we know what we are talking about when we say that Rexall "93" Hair Tonic will grow hair on bald heads, except where baldness has been of such long duration that the roots of the hair are entirely dead, the follicles closed and grown over, and the scalp is glazed.

Remember, we are basing our statements upon what has already been accomplished by the use of Rexall "93"

What Other Papers Say.

Vancouver Province.

Manitoba flour has dropped twenty cents a hundred. Bread "raises" every morning as usual.

If the bakers should go on strike there will be an awful lot of indignation "in the midst" of the June grooms.

Toronto Globe.

Five fleets made up of over two hundred vessels are to be combined in the British naval manoeuvres, which does not look like an evidence of naval or military decadence.

Brantford Expositor.

Goldwin Smith left something like $1,000,000 to Cornell University, to show his attachment as an Englishman to the union of the two branches of our race on this continent and with their common mother. This is a generous gift, but it seems a pity that Toronto University has been overlooked.

Ottawa Journal.

Anyone who takes a log from the shore of the Ottawa River is by the law a thief. But the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company, which in connection with logs on the Ottawa, steals from the pleasure and safety of the people of the country is not by the law a thief. Morally, the log thief has the best of it.

Kingston Standard.

Doubts have been freely and often expressed as to the stability of the French Republic. The programme of constructive legislation which M. Briand has prepared for the French ought to settle these doubts, for it is along most progressive lines and clearly shows an intention of maintaining unbroken progress in the direction followed by his predecessors.

Montreal Herald.

Man, whose inventiveness has risen superior to the dangers of land and sea, is now fairly launched on the conquest of the air. There is no room for doubt about his mastering it, although there may yet be many setbacks in store before security is made practically absolute. It will come. The trip between Friedrichshafen and Düsseldorf deserves to take rank with the trip between London and Manchester, and that was one of the decisive events in the world's history.

Peterboro Examiner.

With the passing of Hon. George E. Foster, who was read out of the conservative party by J. W. Johnson, M. P., at Belleville, in the presence of Leader Borden, the brains and oratory of the conservative party is snuffed out. The party papers declared that Foster was maligned by the Globe, yet they endorse the action—by proxy—of their party leader in castrating Foster for the very offence of which he was declared by the party mouth-piece to be innocent.

London Free Press

At one of Mr. Borden's picnic meetings a prize was offered to the man with the largest family on the ground. Five children were sufficient to take the reward. Clerical Slips.

An English preacher, discoursing upon Bunyan and his works, caused a titter among his hearers by exclaiming, "In these days, my brethren, we want more Bunyans!"

Another clergyman, pleading earnestly with his parishioners for the construction of a cemetery for their parish, asked them to consider "the deplorable condition of 30,000 Christian Englishmen living without Christian burial."

Still more curious was this clerical slip. A gentleman said to a minister: "When do you expect to see Deacon S. again?"

"Never," said the reverend gentleman solemnly. "The deacon is in heaven."

Flamingoes' Tongues.

The beastly Vitellius, as Gibbon calls him, spent at least six millions of money on table in as many months. He invented, or his cook invented for him, a dish which he designated "the shield of Minerva." One of its principal ingredients was flamingoes' tongues, of which both Pliny and Martial speak in encomiastic terms. Dampier says that the flamingoes have "large tongues, and near the root is a piece of fat which is accounted a great dainty." When Captain Owen was surveying the east coast of Africa his sailors shot down hundreds of these beautiful birds in order, with an extravagance worthy of Vitellius, to make a dish of the tongues alone.

She Knew Her Taste.

An old Highland woman who was quite fond of her dram was going to Perth on a visit. At the railway station the uniformed porters quite took her eye.

One of them, approaching her, said: "Porter! Porter!"

PURIFIED HIS BLOOD

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills
Healed Mr. Wilson's Sores

When the sewers of the body—bowels, kidneys and skin ducts—get clogged up, the blood quickly becomes impure and frequently sores break out over the body. The way to heal them, as Mr. Richard Wilson, who lives near London, Ont., found, is to purify the blood. He writes:

"For some time I had been in a low, depressed condition. My appetite left me and I soon began to suffer from indigestion. Quite a number of small sores and blotches formed all over my skin. I tried medicine for the blood and used many kinds of ointments, but without satisfactory results. What was wanted was a thorough cleansing of the blood, and I looked about in vain for some medicine that would accomplish this.

At last Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills were brought to my notice, and they are one of the most wonderful medicines I have ever known. My blood was purified in a very short time, sores healed up, my indigestion vanished. They always have a place in my home and are looked upon as the family remedy."

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills cleanse the system thoroughly. Sold by all dealers at 25c a box. 6

the reward. But a resident of St. Alexis des Monts, in Quebec, is being congratulated on the birth of his thirty-first child, and that record could probably be equalled in other parts of Quebec. Curiously enough the fatherland of this French-Canadian is so distressed over its falling birth-rate that its taxes bachelors and offers premiums to the parents of small families. France once gave of her youth and strength to build up a new world. Now she seems to need the rejuvenating influence of their descendants.

Liver Spots

There is nothing more annoying to a young lady than to have her face or hands marred with Liver spots. They indicate a diseased liver. There is only one remedy that is guaranteed to cure you, and that is Fig Pills. They remove the spots, clear the complexion and cure constipation. Mild in their action. 25c a box, at all leading drug stores, and, remember, Fig Pills are guaranteed to cure you.

Gordon's Rose-Tree at Khartoum.

Of the actual work of Gordon's hands, there remains but a rose-bush in the palace garden, which, hewn down by the malice of his enemies, sprang to life again with the coming of spring.

It is affectionately tended by an old Soudanese sergeant, who was one of Gordon's men, and stands in the midst of an earthly paradise. In that indulgent climate on the banks of the dark river which carries down from the cornucopia of Abyssinia the water that fertilizes Egypt the growth of gardens is tropically exuberant. This rose-tree was found blooming beside the ruins when, on the second day after its red victory at Omdurman, a British army—horse, foot, and artillery—was drawn up, in full pomp of war, besides the last earthly habitation of Charles George Gordon, to give him, in the religions of the three kingdoms, the most solemn funeral service ever read over a general killed in battle, with one of his own old gunboats firing the tolling minute-guns.

Dishonest Croupiers.

Each roulette table in Monte Carlo has a chief, an underchief and seven croupiers. The roulette croupiers are ordered to keep their hands spread out open upon the table between the turns. This is designed not only to give confidence to the players, but to protect the bank against its own employees. Once it was found that a croupier who seemed inordinately fond of snuff had a spring bottom snuff-box. Every now and then he would set it down on a gold piece, and when he took it up the gold piece was inside. Another croupier was discovered to have a sort of funnel under his collar, which ran down to a money belt. Every now and then he would scratch his neck, and every time he did so the bank lost 20 francs.

Impulsive.

Pat, intent on emigrating, as he was out of work, stops before a news-dealer's store and reads a placard with "Situation In Egypt" upon it. "Sure I've come about that situation you're advertising."

"What situation do you mean?" Pat (pointing to poster)—It's the wonn in Egypt I'm after.

"Pooh! That's on the state of affairs!"

"Sorra a ha'porth I care whose estate it's on. Bedad, I'll take it!"—London Mail.

Force of Habit.

"Why did you break your engagement with that schoolteacher?" asked the friend.

"If I failed to show up at her house every evening she expected me to bring a written excuse signed by my mother."

JAPANESE WEDDINGS.

An Important Preliminary is the Advice to the Bride.

A Japanese wedding does not establish a new home. It only adds the bride to the family of the bridegroom. The Government gives official recognition to this custom by transferring the bride's name on the register from her own to her husband's family, so young Orio does not bring Miss Chrysanthemum to his own little dovecot, but to his father's house.

At the door of this house the little bride to be is formally surrendered by her own family. Before the actual wedding ceremony takes place, however, there is an important preliminary to be observed—Miss Chrysanthemum must drink tea with her mother and the wife of the go-between. This lady might be called a bridesmaid, but the Japanese wedding knows no bridesmaids in the western sense. There is, however, a little girl in attendance called a "Shinshu" who

THE BORA OF TRIESTE.

Havoc Wrought at Resort by the Strong Wind.

The wind which has raged over Trieste for the last three days, sweeping down from the snowclad Karst and whipping the sea into watery dust, deserves a place in the meteorological chronicles of Europe. Along the eastern Adriatic littoral the bora has an evil reputation; but reputations may be exaggerated, and in calm weather the blue water seems ready to supply many a grain of salt for the seasoning of travelers' tales. I confess to having listened skeptically to stories of the bora's terrific force told by officials in Herzegovina or by Dalmatian longshoremen, for, in a modest way, I have had some experience of European winds and was disposed to class the bora with the mistral or the tramontana. I fancied, moreover, that, in point of sheer force, a stiff libeccio, such as mows the thickets on the Tuscan Coast level as a college lawn, could hold its own against any child of Boreas. True, the bora is piercingly cold; but I remember the "Black Friday" of January, 1881, in East Anglia, and have felt the veracity of the Roman rhyme: "Quanno er Tiritone mette la camicina, Tira 'na Tramontana proprio soprafinna."

Now, however, I know the difference between tramontana and bora. The worst tramontana can only swathe the Roman Triton and his fountain in ice; a bora would blow Triton, fountain, and ice from the Piazza Barberini into Piazza Colonna!

The bora realizes the conception of

Variations in Taste Are Due to the Sense of Smell.

It is not generally known that we can taste only four different kinds of matter—that is, perceive by means of the tongue any more than four taste qualities of matter. They are sweet, sour, bitter and salt. If one holds his nose and places on his tongue in succession pieces of apple, onion, raw potato and beet he cannot tell the difference between them. By these experiments it has been determined that the sense of smell has a great deal to do with the flavors perceived or taken cognizance of by the brain. As the tongue can distinguish only these four sensations, it is at once seen that all variations in taste are due to the sense of smell. In some cases, as with the orange, all the flavor is in the smell, so when we eat an orange while we have a cold no taste is apparent.

These four sensations also have not their respective seats distributed uniformly over the tongue. Sugar and other sweets are perceived at the tip of the tongue, as are also salty things. If a little sugar is placed on the back of the tongue no sweetness is apparent. The locus of sour and bitter perception is back farther in the mouth and placed on the sides of the tongue. Both these facts are easily proved by experiment.

Another peculiarity of taste perception is that dry things cannot be tasted; only those that are in solution. If a dry cracker is placed on the tongue no taste is apparent until the saliva has dissolved part of it. If the tongue is wiped dry with a handkerchief and a little sugar is placed on it no taste is perceived for some time.

The mechanical arrangements provided by the body for the perception of taste are also interesting. In the mouth, situated in the places mentioned as seats of taste perception and also in other places, though not so thick, are what are known as "taste buds." They get this name from their almost exact similarity to a bud when cut in cross section. These taste buds have in them the excessively fine branches of the nerves of taste that carry the impulse to the brain.

The only reason a great many things are tasteless to us is because they are not soluble in water or saliva. Take sand, for instance, or lead or gold. None of these gives any taste on this account.

The tongue of course has many uses besides the organ of taste. One of the chief of these is its ability of its end to perceive very slight touch sensations. The tip of the tongue is proved by numerous experiments to be the most delicate touch perceiver in the human body.

Of course the floodgates of the saliva ducts are controlled by nerves from the brain. One or two peculiar experiments can be made to show results of thought on their operation. If one thinks about sucking a lemon or about eating a luscious pear his mouth immediately receives an extra flow of saliva. The mouth waters for it. If a person is frightened the flow of saliva is stopped, and immediately afterward one perceives that his mouth is extraordinarily dry and cannot account for it.

An Odd Turkish Superstition.

An odd Turkish superstition is as follows: If one finds a piece of bread lying upon the ground he must pick it up, kiss it and carry it until he finds a hole into which the bread can be inserted. To step upon a piece of bread or to leave it lying upon the ground is one of the unpardonable sins and dooms the offender to the third hell, where he is perpetually gored by an ox that has but a single horn that is in the center of his forehead.

try to be observed—Miss Chrysanmum must drink tea with her mother and the wife of the go-between. This lady might be called a bridesmaid, but the Japanese wedding knows no bridesmaids in the western sense.
There is, however, a little girl in attendance, called a "butterfly," who has important duties to fulfill.
While the three women are together the occasion is taken to give the nervous little bride some final advice on her conduct in her new home—how to humor her husband and how to get on the right side of her mother-in-law, a personage who is just as important in Japan as she is with us.
Perhaps, moreover, the two older women quote from the Japanese "Greater Learning For Women," the reversed classic which lays down rules for female conduct. "The great lifelong duty of a woman is obedience. In her dealings with her husband both the expression of her countenance and the style of her address should be courteous, humble and conciliatory, never peevish and intractable, never rude and arrogant. Never set thyself up against thy husband with harsh features and a boisterous voice."
This seems to insure the young husband getting his own way without any bickering or nagging, but it may be that the old hands tell the young bride how to bend Orio even while she seems to obey him and how to lead him when she appears to follow, as is the way of women the world over.—Wide World Magazine.

Cabbage.

Cabbage in its many varieties has been developed from a single wild growth called Brassica oleracea, which in its wild state is very remote in appearance from our cabbage. Kale, cauliflower and collards come from the same origin. The principal cultivated varieties of all these are known to have existed as far back as the sixteenth century.

Wanted It Showy.

"Show me some tiaras, please. I want one for my wife."

Yes, sir. About what price?"
"Well, at such a price that I can say: 'Do you see that woman with the tiara? She is my wife.'" between tramontana and bora. The worst tramontana can only swathe the Roman Triton and his fountain in ice;

a bora would blow Triton, fountain, and ice from the Piazza Barbe-rini into Piazza Colonna!

The bora realizes the conception of "thorough." Solidity and imperme-ability case to be positive ideas. Walls, be they stone; windows, be they double; wraps, be they of fur, afford no protection. Indoors the wind screams and wails; without, it sweeps along with a roar as of express trains passing in endless procession over an iron viaduct. To walk against it in the open is impossible; to stand upright is an athletic feat; to drive is to risk life and limb. Adroitly though the Triestini slink around street corners and dodge the gale in alley and passage, the hospitals are kept busy on bora days binding up broken heads, setting fractured limbs, and plastering cuts and bruises.

The tourists who started out in a cab to see the city returned on discovering that the by no means modern vehicle had a passion for aviation.
On the Istrian light railway near Mugagia a crowded train was lifted bodily off the rails and hurled down an embankment. A large steamer, moored to the sturdy columns of Istrian marble on the Molo San Carlo by a massive steel chain and four-inch cables, was simply blown out to sea, the cables parting like tow and the chain cutting through a yard of solid marble as through cheese. Seagulls hid from the frigid fury of the gale, and a foolish pigeon that had ventured on the Molo was twice baffled in its attempts to reach the shelter of the governor's palace, fifty yards away.

Strangest of sights was the sea.
Out in the offing waves may have run high and fast, but from the land no billows nor "white horses" were visible. Two furlongs from shore everything was shrouded in a hissing whitish haze whipped by the bora from the green surface of the uncannily calm water—Vienna correspondent, London Times.

Long Distance Courtships.

Sketching one day in Burma, an English artist noticed a man a little distance off glaring fiercely straight ahead at him at some object he could not see from his position. The man sat with the same fixed glare the whole afternoon and was at it again next morning. The artist had the curiosity to ask an English visitor what it meant. The reply was, "Oh, he is in love!" And it was explained that this was their method of courtship.
The object of the man's attentive gaze was a girl in a neighboring bazaar.
When a young man falls in love he has to seat himself at a certain distance from his adored one and wait for her to do the rest. If she looks in his direction once or twice on the first or second day he is wildly encouraged, and if on the third day she nods to him and smiles it is time to go to the parents with reference to the marriage settlements.

A Great New Humorist.

American papers are now referring in flaring headlines to Mr. P. G.
Wodehouse, whose stories are forming such a popular feature of The Strand and other Newnes' publications, as
"the greatest of hustlers" and "the man who never tires." Mr. Wodehouse is at present in America, and he startled the residents of the hotel where he is staying when he discarded the use of the lift, preferring to walk up the stairs. This proceeding was simply amazing to the American mind, and the story getting about, the newspapers came out with the fact in type about a foot high.

Save Babies' Lives. For Babies and Small Children. (Made in France.)

Dr. Hennequin's Infant Tablets saved our little girl's life. Three doctors said she could not live. The Tablets cured her.—Mr. E. R. McBRIDE, Napanee, Ont.

My baby was so weak from sickness that he could hardly walk. We thought he would die. We could find nothing to help him. I was given a sample package of three Hennequin Tablets; we used them; I saw a change at once. We secured the Tablets and our baby improved every day, and is now a bright, fat, good natured boy; you could not believe he was the same child. They certainly cured my baby and saved his life. I believe them to be the best medicine ever sold for babies. Mothers if your babies are not well take my advice and try these Tablets.—MRS. JAMES RIDDELL, Barrydale, Ont.

We have hundreds of such letters. If the Tablets were not what you need we would not offer to give them away and prepay them. If your baby is not well send for trial package.

THEIR FINAL QUARREL

She Said It Was Irrevocable, but He Knew Better.

It was all off. They had quarreled, finally and irrevocably. It doesn't matter now what it was about. The chances are that in their anger neither remembered anything except that he had disappointed her in some awful, unforgivable way and she had seized the diamond engagement ring from a dainty, slender finger and thrust it upon him with a gesture of infinite scorn.

For an instant he held the circlet in his hand ruefully. For another instant he paced the porch, hands in his pockets, head low, his voice quivering with emotion as he pleaded. Suddenly he stopped in front of her.

"That's final, is it?" he inquired.

"Final," she replied icily. "No man with a spark of—"

"All right!" he snapped. "This thing's no use to me, then."

His right arm shot out like the arm of a ball pitcher, and a second later the tinkle-tinkle of metal on the concrete walk half a block away told her he had thrown the ring away.

"Oh!" she cried, and there was sudden anguish in her heart, "I didn't mean it! We must find it—at once."

"I don't care for it," he said stubbornly. "Life has mighty little now to make"—

"Silly!" she cried. "Help me—immediately."

He couldn't let her go alone, with night coming on, so, after proper reluctance, he followed. In the eagerness of searching all her anger melted. It took a long time, but finally he stooped quickly and exclaiming, "Here it is!" held up the diamond ring.

What happened in the next hour is nobody's business except their own. The human, masculine part of the story was disclosed to his bosom friend late that night in the quiet of their room.

"Had it in my pocket all the time," he said. "Threw a quarter down the street. And, dad bling it, I didn't find it either!"

But it did the work.—Kansas City Times.

One Case Where the Half Proved Greater Than the Whole.

There is no painter who lends him self to "splitting" so much as Botticelli—i. e., a division of the panel into two parts so as to form separate pictures. Years ago I sold to a Mr. Buttery of London half a Botticelli, which is now owned by Herr Kaufmann of Berlin. I have myself seen the other half of the picture, as well as the picture in its entire state.

In one case I can recall the half proved greater than the whole. A certain Signor Barili bequeathed a valuable Botticelli to his two grandsons, who were twins. But, although twins, these two young men were rather quarrelsome and had no taste in common. One proposed to sell the picture, which had been painted for one of their ancestors. It is said, by Botticelli himself. The other would not consent. The first then proposed that the other should buy his share and keep the picture himself. He took me with him, and I assigned the value of the picture at 5,000 lire, saying I would give that for it. The brother declined and suggested placing the picture in the custody of an aunt pending an adjustment of the terms. "Oh, very well," cried his brother, flying into a passion, "if you won't buy and won't let me sell there's only one thing to do," and before any one could interfere he emptied three chambers of a revolver into the panel, completely destroying one-half of the composition, including a St. John and a Joseph. The picture being sent to me to restore, I could do nothing with it and strongly advised separating the panel. Shortly after I did so the owner died, and I disposed of the work for 6,000 lire to Adolph Kann. It is now, I believe, in Russia. —E. Panzone in Strand Magazine.

STARVATION AMID PLENTY.

An Odd Situation, Yet It Is the World's Greatest Danger.

Nitrogen is possibly the oddest of all the chemical elements. It has no taste, no color, no odor, no marked affinity for other elements. It is neutral, negative and a non-supporter of life and combustion. Nevertheless, it is a very important element. It constitutes the main difference between the animal and vegetable kingdoms. It is the basis of practically every explosive known to science, and the frightful power of dynamite, nitroglycerine, cordite and gunpowder is due to this queer element.

A trace of this harmless nitrogen, added to a bit of the fluffy, innocent cotton so common in our households, converts it into the deadly guncotton. Although it has no odor, yet when it is combined with hydrogen, another gas without odor, it forms the strong-smelling gas known as ammonia. The sweetest perfumes known to man are all nitrogen compounds. Although it has no color, yet when combined chemically with two parts of oxygen, it makes a gas that is a brilliant cherry red.

Although it is inert, and we breathe gallons of it every hour, yet when chemically combined in still another proportion with oxygen, it forms the well-known laughing gas, so commonly used as an anæsthetic by dentists. Though it has no apparent effect upon the body, yet when combined with carbon, hydrogen and oxygen in the form of meat, the body finds it the hardest element to get rid of, and too often it is the cause of the most fatal of all kidney diseases.

Air is a mechanical mixture. By this is meant that the constituents are distinct and separate, even as sugar is distinct from the water in which it is dissolved.

Were nitrogen to form a chemical combustion with the other constituents of the atmosphere, all life would become extinct almost instantly. An atom of nitrogen, so inert and harmless, combined with another atom of an equally harmless substance, carbon, sometimes called soot, makes the deadly gas known as cyanogen, the basis of prussic acid, one drop of which will cause almost instantaneous death.

Although there is so much nitrogen all around us, the world is slowly starving to death for lack of it. Animals must have it in the combined form, and it must be given to the soil. It we want wheat, and corn, and other grains. Hundreds of years ago, birds deposited a nitrogen-bearing substance on the sea cliffs and in the sea caves along the coast of Chile, in far off South America.

"I HONESTLY BELIEVE 'FRUIT-A-TIVES'"

The Greatest Cure For Rheumatism In The World"

KNOWLTON, QUE., Oct. 12th. 1909.

"For many years, I suffered from severe Rheumatism, and the attacks were very distressing and prevented me from doing my ordinary work. I tried many remedies and physicians' treatments, but nothing seemed to do me much good, and I was becoming very anxious for fear I would become a permanent cripple from the disease.

I tried "Fruit-a-tives" and this medicine has entirely cured me and I honestly believe it is the greatest Rheumatism cure in the world."

E. E. MILLS.

Such a statement could not be bought from a man like Mr. Mills. He thinks too much of his good name, to sell it or sign it to an untruth. Mr. Mills tried "Fruit-a-tives" after all other treatment failed—and "Fruit-a-tives" cured him of Rheumatism. In the goodness of his heart, he wrote the above letter in order that sufferers in all parts of Canada would know that there is one remedy that actually does cure Rheumatism. This testimonial was entirely unsolicited on our part. We did not know that Mr. Mills was taking "Fruit-a-tives" until we received the above letter.

It is a case like Mr. Mills' that proves the marvellous powers of "Fruit-a-tives" in arresting and curing disease. It may be stated, without fear of contradiction, that "Fruit-a-tives" will positively cure Rheumatism when properly used.

"Fruit-a-tives" is the only medicine in the world made of fruit juices and is the greatest Rheumatism cure known to modern science.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial box, 25c. Sold by all dealers or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Beans.

The bean that we eat in some form so frequently, that almost everybody likes, is comparatively new as an edible. Our common every-day bean is a native of South America and was introduced into Europe, whence it came to this country during the sixteenth century and now is represented by over 150 cultivated varieties. The big broad bean is the bean of history, and its origin is so remote that it is doubtful. It is probably a native of southwestern Asia and northeastern Europe. The broad, but not thick lima bean, called by some folks "butter bean," is a pole variety that came from South America. Soy beans, little pealike beans, with hairy plants, are natives of China and Japan and are as old, as cultivated vegetables, as anything else in those long time countries.

An Orchid Tragedy.

Perhaps Madagascar has claimed more orchid hunters' lives and been the scene of more revolting acts of cruelty than any other place. Some years ago a German orchid fancier while seeking some specimens in the forests of this island was captured by some of the native officials, who, after covering him with oil, burned him alive. Another collector who was seized by some of the same officials was allowed to choose between being burned alive or himself setting fire to some fagots on which lay another prisoner, also an orchid collector, and thus saving his own life. He chose the latter alternative and died six months later a lunatic.

Youthful Genius.

Pascal wrote treatises on acoustics at twelve, at which age he was busily occupied in constructing elaborate circulating machines, and at sixteen he published his treatise on "Conic Sections," which Descartes refused to believe was not the work of a great master. John Stuart Mill was at twelve, at which age he was busily occupied in constructing elaborate calculating machines, and at sixteen published his treatise on "Conic Sections," which Descartes refused to believe was not the work of a great master. John Stuart Mill was studying Greek at three, had practically mastered the language at seven and a year later was acting as school-master to his younger brothers and sisters. John Ruskin actually produced a manuscript work in three volumes before he reached his seventh birthday.

A Different View.

"She was very complimentary to me last night."

"In what way?"

"She called me a human comet."

"And you consider that a compliment?"

"Sure, means I'm a hustler."

"Not exactly. She told me yesterday that she had just learned that a comet is composed of millions of feet of gas."

When Mme. Sembrich Got a Stage Gown for a Song.

Whenever I think of my early operatic experience I delight to recall a little dressmaker in Dresden who literally sold me a stage gown for a song. I had made my first appearance and was well received. Then word came that I was to appear next as Violetta in "Traviata." Now, in Germany the curious custom obtains of furnishing costumes to the male singers and obliging the women to dress themselves. At that stage in my career a role calling for several elaborate evening gowns meant a serious drain on my resources. At the same time I realized that appropriate dressing was vitally essential to my success. Bravely I began my bargain hunting, but the prices were far beyond my fears. I was forced to resign myself to do the best I could from my own scant wardrobe. But no ingenuity could encompass a suitable ball gown for the third act. I started on another round of the shops, and good fortune bore me this time to a smart looking little place. The proprietress recognized me and was most courteous. Just the gown I wanted was the first dress she produced. My voice trembled as I asked the price. She named a figure that put it as effectually beyond my reach as the top of Mont Blanc.

"What can you pay, madam?" she asked gently as she read the disappointment in my face.

Hesitatingly I named a sum less than half the price she demanded. "On one condition the gown is yours," she said.

"And what is that?" I asked breathlessly.

"I have a father who is bedridden," she said. "Never was there a greater lover of music. Only last night he was fretting because he might never hear the little Sembrich, of whom I have told him so much since your debut here. Come and sing an aria for him and the gown is yours at your own price."

I kissed her with brimming eyes, and the bargain was struck. That night, with my husband as accompanist, I went to the home of the old gentleman and sang for him, not one, but many arias. That was the first and only time I ever got a stage gown for a song.—Mme. Sembrich in New Idea Woman's Magazine.

Good Luck to the Deceased.

A former consul general at Shanghai tells of the interest evinced by a Chinaman of that city in the wedding ceremony of an English couple there.

At the conclusion of the usual western rites incident upon the departure of the happy couple for their honeymoon the Celestial sought the consul with this question:

"Why do occidentals throw rice after the departing couple?"

"I am not aware of the precise origin or significance of the custom," banteringly replied the official. "All I know is that it's meant for good luck."

"Then why," demanded the Chinese triumphantly, "do not you westerners throw rice after the hearse when there is a funeral?"

Sharks' Eggs.

The eggs of fishes are usually small, soft and inconspicuous. The most remarkable point about them is the extraordinary number laid by the individual. A single cod lays as many as 9,000,000 eggs. Sharks lay eggs which are large in size, few as to numbers and are deposited singly instead of in masses. These eggs consist of a dark-colored leathery envelope and are usually adorned with frills, horns or long-twisted tendrils. These appendages serve the purpose of keeping the egg case supported among the branches of seaweeds, thus preserving the embryo from the damage it would sustain were the egg carried hither and thither by the waves.—Scientific American.

ADOLPHUSTOWN CROPS

The mercantile hay crops are not half to the acre what they were last year, and timothy is almost annihilated all over the Province of Ontario.

The merchantable hay so called for horses is composed largely of the white dutch clover, alsike clover, wire grass and short, unheaded timothy, all of it short and thin and will not cut one-half ton to the acre. The continued frosts and wet up into June is the cause of destroying the timothy and leaving the old meadows thin and short.

The new meadows are nothing but red clover of a very heavy and sappy growth, and if I do not mistake when the crop is in the barn, it should be more properly called Black clover instead of red clover, especially if the weather continues showery it cannot be cured in such a green, sappy state. The mowing machine started on the 18th to cut "black clover" and whether it is cured red or "black" it will have to be fed on the farm. This season ought to teach the farmers in future not to lose their head by running after high-priced timothy—the O. A. C. says that for every ton of timothy taken from the land $7.00 worth of fertilizer must be put back to leave the land as it was before the timothy was taken from it. This being the case, the farmers have gone more than crazy—they have gone mad, to sell a few tons of timothy. They have sold their milch cows in large numbers this spring and have not raised calves to match it, hence the high price of milch cows and beef cattle for several years to come, with an accumulated amount of "black" clover those cows and calves that should have been kept and raised to eat it up. When farmers get so blind nature mends the cause for them, now they can stack their "black" clover and go without eating good, juicy beef till they raise up a stock of calves.

Hogg & Lyttle of Picton, can begin to get ready for big bins, to receive their Alaska Kent Peas, sown here for them—they are the most delightful crop that I ever saw grown—every man that sowed them in Adolphustown will soon have a big wad of bills in his pocket, that sowed a few acres. This has been a grand year for the Alaska Pea.

Plums, gages, cherries and strawberries are a total failure, and so are winter apples.

To return to the grain, I might say that fall wheat was never so good. Oats being generally sown on low ground is this year a failure on such land, although fairly good on high land.—Picton Gazette.

DENBIGH.

Mr. A. Fritsch has returned from New Ontario where he has been visiting his son Charles, and his daughter, Mrs. G. Stein and their families who reside near Hailybury. His daughters Clara, of New York, and Elsa, of Eganville, also arrived to enjoy a good visit with their parents and friends in their old home.

Miss Martha Petzold, of Ottawa, is also enjoying a month's vacation with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Petzold.

Mr. H. Glaeser made a business trip to Renfrew and Arnprior, and made use of the occasion to visit his brother-in-law, Mr. Julius Kittner.

Mrs. Rev. J. Reble arrived home again after staying a couple of weeks with Rev. and Mrs. Wm. Kupper, of Arnprior.

Mr. Kurt Geyer, of Milwaukee, who has been the guest of Rev. J. Reble for a month, has returned again to U. S. Dominions.

Messrs. Wm. Chatson and Rudolph Stein left for Saskatoon, Sask.

Mrs. H. Bartsch and little daughter left last Thursday for Verona on a visit to her son, Charles.

PE-RU-NA PROMPTLY RELIEVES

A Case of Dreadful Suffering Which Had Continued For Months.

An Account of a Remarkable Recovery Given By Mr. Alfred Wood, Teacher of a Private School at Launceston, Tasmania.

MR. AND MRS. ALFRED WOOD.

Mr. Alfred Wood, who has a private school at 22 Frederick street, Launceston, Tasmania (Australia), has been a teacher for 37 years under the Educational Department of Tasmania. He writes, concerning his wife's case, as follows:

"My wife was suffering for months from gastro-enteritis, and was given up by her medical attendant.

"By good fortune I was induced to try Peruna in her case, and I can truthfully state that from the first dose her dreadful suffering ceased; and after taking five bottles she is permanently cured."

HOW does Peruna make such extraordinary cures as above recited?

By simply arousing the forces of Nature to throw off the diseased action.

Peruna contains no magic and does not operate in any mysterious way, but it does help Nature to combat disease, and thus many times comes to the rescue of the patient in some important crisis.

There is always a time in the course of any disease when a little help goes a great way.

Just as the scales are beginning to descend, when one ounce more would determine the fate of the patient, a little lift will turn the scales in favor of the patient.

Peruna is a handy medicine to have in the household.

It helps many diseases by imparting a natural vigor to the whole system.

As a tonic or catarrh remedy, its reputation is well established all over the world.

As a remedy for stomach and bowel disease, the fame of Peruna is undoubtedly destined to become greater than that of any other medicine in the world.

A great many cases like that above referred to have found Peruna of untold value when no other help seemed of any avail.

Pe-ru-na For Indigestion.

Mr. Donald Robb, Jr., 16 Wrights Ave., Halifax, Nova Scotia, member Independent Order of Forrester, writes:

"While on a visit to Boston, I must have eaten something that did not agree with my stomach, as a terrible case of indigestion followed.

"Peruna was recommended to me and after using three bottles I was entirely cured.

"I therefore recommend Peruna to any one suffering with stomach trouble."

Mr. Chas. Brown, Rogersville, Tenn., writes:

"A friend advised me to take Peruna for indigestion and it cured me in a short time."

A QUAINST CUSTOM.

Passing of Winter Marked by Burning of the Boegg.

Switzerland still preserves some interesting customs, one of which is the spring fete annually celebrated by curious and quaint ceremonies. One would hardly think that in such a hustling commercial city as Zurich its citizens would find time for "keeping up" the memory of an affair that must date back to primitive times. But a day is set apart every year for just such a festival, called the "Burning of the Boegg," which traditionally marks the "Passing of Winter." It is also called, locally, "Sechselauten," meaning "six o'clock ringing least," because its commencement is announced by the cathedral chimers at that early hour.

The festival this year began with a procession of boys and girls toward the great public square. The boys, dressed as pierrots, dragged the car heard the people cheered, for it was an intimation that winter's reign was over, and that spring had begun.

The flames leaped up and were reflected on the placid surface of the lake, where, from the innumerable boats, fireworks added to the liveliness of the scene.

The guild houses, of which Zurich has many handsome examples, were thrown open to visitors, and the evening was devoted entirely to dancing and banqueting. Then the celebrants retired, ready next morning to resume their usual business.

A Slang Phrase.

"Bull con" a slang phrase which means to flatter, to praise with ulterior motives, had its origin in the west years ago. When the gold brick game was started the bunko men sprang a fine, high-sounding combination of words upon the simple farmers. They called it an investment in "bullion consolidated." Years after the words

Dawn of Civilization.

In the light of the latest facts it appears that Babylonia was in a comparatively high state of civilization about 6,000 years before the Christian era. At about that time from the east came Babylonian settlers, who found their way toward the west and, finally halting to the northwest of the Red Sea, colonized the region on either side of the Nile. When these colonists arrived from Babylonia they were not wild barbarians, but, as we know from the most learned Egyptians, possessed great ability in certain arts—in a word, were civilized. Thus Egypt, long supposed to be the mother of civilization, must hereafter give way to the land of the Euphrates.

The Doyen of the Royal Academy.

Amongst the Academy (London) pictures this year are six from the brush of Mr. James Sant, R.A., the doyen of the Royal Academy, who recently celebrated his ninetieth birthday. One of them, which Mr. Sant considers the best thing he has ever done, was painted while he was in bed, the only material for his imagination to work on being the walls of his bedroom and a church steeple which he could see from his window. Mr. Sant suffers somewhat from absent-mindedness, and it is said that one day he was caught walking about the Grosvenor Gallery with his umbrella up, under the impression that it was raining.

Would Run No Risks.

Mrs. Crestfield's telephone bell rang the other evening, and, putting the receiver to her ear, she heard the voice of an intimate friend at the other end of the line talking excitedly. "Oh, Mrs. Crestfield," said the voice, "isn't it dreadful? My little Ann has diphtheria!" "How awful!" was the response. "Is she in the house?" "Of course," replied the voice. "I have a trained nurse for her." "If she is in the house," said Mrs. Crestfield, "I must ask you to hang up the receiver at once. I have small children of my own, you know, and diphtheria is so contagious! I don't want to seem unsympathetic, but I will not run any risks!"—New York Times.

Why He Was Sad.

Jones' rich grandmother died, and Jones seemed unnaturally depressed and sad. His friend tried to cheer him. "She left a last will and testament, I suppose," said Jenkins carelessly. "Oh, yes," said Jones, raising his head at last, "she left a will and testament!" "Ah," chimed in Brown, "you were always a friend of hers! Of course your name was mentioned?" "Yes," answered Jones, bursting into floods of tears, "my name was mentioned, boys. I—I am to have"— "They hung expectant, while more sobs choked back his words. "I," he declared at last, "am to have the testament!"—London Scraps.

Dominions.

Messrs. Wm. Chatson and Rudolph Stein left for Saskatoon, Sask.

Mrs. H. Bartsch and little daughter left last Thursday for Verona on a visit to her son, Charles.

Mr. Fred Wensley, of Wensley, has again conducted the entrance examinations at our school.

Mr. Elisa Wagar, our popular teacher, is going to leave us at the close of the present time. He has made many friends here during the too years or more he was with us and his removal is much regretted.

Mr. J. W. Lane is building quite an addition to his dwelling and Chas. C. Stein is also building a new frame house to replace the one destroyed by fire last spring. Among other late improvements in the looks of our village may be mentioned that the Denbigh House received a fresh coat of paint.

Mr. J. S. Lane also painted his house.

Mr. E. C. Bebee is now busy painting his store and veranda, and a nice veranda has been built and nicely painted at the Lutheran parsonage.

A Simple Treatment that Will Make Hair Grow.

Every up-to-date woman should have radiant hair.

There are thousands of women with harsh, faded, characterless hair who do not try to improve it.

In England and Paris women take pride in having beautiful hair. Every Canadian woman can have lustrous and luxuriant hair by using Salvia, the Great American Sage Hair Tonic.

Every reader of The Express can have an attractive head of hair in a few days by using Salvia.

Mr. Jessop sells a large bottle for 50 cents, and guarantees it to banish dandruff, stop falling hair and itching scalp in ten days, or money back.

meanings "six o'clock ringing feast," because its commencement is announced by the cathedral chimes at that early hour.

The festival this year began with a procession of boys and girls toward the great public square. The boys, dressed as pierrots, dragged the car on which the portly toy snow man stood. The pierrots were followed by knights in armor, members of various guilds in their picturesque costumes, cow herders, fishermen, clowns and others. The Boegg was a huge figure made of wood, covered with cotton wool, and stuffed with crackers and gun powder. The procession wound through the streets on either side of the river Limmat, and made its way to the square.

The figure, emblematic of spring, followed and was greeted with the welcoming cheers of the throngs gathered to witness the ceremony. Maidens in appropriate costumes escorted the triumphal car bearing the Goddess of Spring.

The procession ending its march the Boegg was placed on an immense pile of wood. An intermission in the ceremonies occurred for lunch. In the afternoon a more important procession and function took place. The city guilds, in quaint attire, formed in line, each member dressed in the costume of his craft, as in the medieval days. These were followed by a long line of highly decorated floats, among the most noteworthy being those representing the Golden Calf, the Ceres, and the Goddess of Harvest. The citizens played practical jokes on each other during the day. When the procession reached the square the throng was immense. Near the Boegg stood several men, ready, at the prearranged signal, on the stroke of six o'clock, to blow up the figure after it had been set on fire. When the sound of the explosion was

Lord Morley as a Waltzer.

Like Lord Morley, Sir Charles is a scholar as well as a politician. Lady Dilke once stated that her first waltz was danced with Lord Morley. "And a very good waltzer he was too," she said. In his hours of relaxation Sir Charles is devoted to rowing and the rapier, while the late Lady Dilke, who was well known as an art critic as well as social reformer, made the collecting of rare books her chief hobby.

STOPPED THE DUEL

But Not Until Maynard Was Nearly Dead From Terror.

Regnier, the French satirist of the reign of Louis XIII., forced a quarrel upon the poet Maynard, who was almost Quakerish in his love of peace. Maynard could not well avoid the appearance of taking up the quarrel, but immediately after the preliminaries sought out his patron, Comte de Clermont-Lodève, and begged him to "surprise" the party at the dueling ground and break up the affair. The count promised, and Maynard went away with a lighter heart. But his patron, wanting some amusement, hastened to the field and concealed himself in the shrubbery before the party arrived. Maynard went through the first stages of preparation very well, but grew more and more nervous as time passed, and the count did not appear. Then he began to play for delay. First he was sure that his sword was shorter than his adversary's, necessitating a slow and technical measurement. Next his boots hurt him, and he had a long, hard struggle to get them off his feet. At last, after the cold perspiration had begun to drip from his brow and he was more dead than alive, his protector emerged suddenly from the bushes and interfered. A peace was soon patched up, Maynard declaring that if he had said anything disagreeable about Regnier he had not intended to do so and Regnier accepting this as balm for his wounded feelings. As Maynard threw down his sword at the close of the parley and reached for his hat he was heard to murmur, "Another time I shall trust to my own wits to pull me out of a scrape, for if I had depended on the count I might have been made into mince meat a half hour ago!"—New York Post.

THE ROYAL HOUSEHOLD

WHO THE SERVANTS ARE AND WHAT THEY DO.

In a Large Number of Instances They Hold Almost Hereditary Positions.

The Doddses, Jacksons, Chandlers, Warrens, and others now in the employment of their Majesties are the children or grandchildren of those who lived and died in the Royal employ. An outsider rarely has a chance of entering the Royal service.

Quite 90 per cent. of the servants at Buckingham Palace, and other Royal residences, are the sons or daughters of people employed in some capacity or other by Royalty, or of tenants on the Royal estate.

The whole staff of maidservants, of whom there are over fifty at Buckingham Palace, are under the control of Mrs. Rosalie Dodds, the head housekeeper. The maids rise at 6 a.m. in the winter and 5.30 a.m. in the summer. Breakfast is served in the large maidservants' hall at seven o'clock, and three of the maids are selected in turn each week to wait on the others at meals.

THE "MORNING WORK."

From eight to noon the maids are at work in the different sets of rooms allotted to their charge. Each room is then inspected by one of the assistant housekeepers, of whom there are six, to see that it has been put properly in order, and at half-past twelve a report is made to Mrs. Dodds by the assistant housekeepers that what is called the "morning work" has been finished.

In the afternoon a certain number of the maids are allowed off duty between 3 and 6 p.m. The maids off duty have a large and extremely comfortable room to sit in, where they can read, write, or do their own work, and where, with the consent of the head housekeeper, they can see their friends.

The "outings" of the maidservants are arranged by the head housekeeper. Each maid is allowed out once a week from 6 to 10 p.m., and she can go out when off duty in the afternoon by permission of Mrs. Dodds. A whole day "outing" is given to each maidservant, from noon to ten o'clock, once a month.

Each girl on entering service at Buckingham Palace is given a printed copy of the rules and regulations she will be required to obey, and with which she must make herself thoroughly acquainted.

PERIOD OF PROBATION.

For the first month a maid at Buckingham Palace is regarded as a probationer. If, at the end of that time, she is not strong enough for the work, or does not like it, she is generally found employment at one of the other residences of Royalty.

But as the maids who are promoted to the best paid positions in the Royal service are usually selected from the staff at Buckingham Palace, a girl always does her best to qualify for service under Mrs. Dodds.

THE MANCHURIAN TIGER.

Difficult to Shoot—Held in Awe and Veneration by Natives.

The long haired tiger is found throughout Manchuria wherever there is hilly country, but I never heard of them being found on the plains, says a writer in the Field. They are extremely difficult to bag and are by no means numerous. The only time when it would be possible to systematically hunt them would be in the winter when the snow is on the ground; the months of January and February would be the best. I hunted in Manchuria in October and November, and although I saw a good deal of spoor I never saw or heard a tiger or even heard of one having been seen in the neighborhood.

A Chinese farmer told me that during an experience extending over forty years he had only twice seen a tiger; this man was a keen hunter and did not confine himself to one district, so that tigers must be very scarce. Before the snow falls there is really no method that one can adopt for tiger hunting. The natives hold the tiger in a certain amount of veneration and awe and would not, I fancy, be willing to impart any information even of they had it. I tried leaving out kills, but met with no success. Any attempt at beating the thickets and long grass would be quite out of the question, as it would be impossible to get the beaters, and the chance of coming unexpectedly on a tiger is very small.

A few tigers are, however, trapped and shot every winter by native hunters, and the procedure seems to be as follows: Whenever fresh tiger tracks are seen in the snow they are followed up by two or three men, and if they are discovered early in the day and the sun be shining the tiger is often found lying asleep among rocks on the crest of a ridge. If he be found in this way the hunters creep up silently and all fire at the animal together, as no Chinaman would venture to tackle a tiger single handed. If, however, the spoor is not seen till late in the day and if the weather be very cloudy the hunters content themselves with watching at some point where the tiger has passed, as they say it always comes back on its tracks and they may be able to get a shot as it passes, or if it does so in the night they can follow it up the next day.

I was unable to verify this statement, as although I did once find tracks in the snow they were soon obliterated by fresh snow falling. The winters in Manchuria are very severe and tents could not possibly be used; one would have to live in one of the sable trappers' huts that are scattered through the forest.

Tigers do occur in Corea, at any rate in the north, but from what I have heard the conditions there are even more unfavorable than in Manchuria and the country has been in a very unsettled state since the Japanese occupation. In addition to tiger the following game may be found in Manchuria: Bear (black and brown), wapiti, Sika deer (two species) roe deer, serow, wild pig, leopard and lynx—all, however, very scarce and hard to bag, with the exception of roe deer and serow.

LOOK OUT FOR DANGER

RISK IN THE USE OF STIMULANTS AND DRUGS.

Crime, Insanity, Pauperism and Sickness is Due to Alcohol.

The statistics given below, gathered by earnest and unprejudiced men, would make good reading for your son.

And in connection with this reading matter, you might point out to him that it would be just as sensible, just as manly, and just as great a proof of reason on his part to run blindfolded over the roofs of ten-storey buildings, and take his chances of escaping harm, as to sow his wild oats in the sexual field, and to use stimulants and drugs and run the risk of coming out with health and vitality for himself and his offspring.

Another thing you want to impress upon the mind of your son, and to pray God with all your strength to give you eloquence and convincing power while you talk.

A MANLY MAN.

You want to make him realize the splendid virtue of being a manly man, of abhorring anything effeminate in manner and habits; of loathing every case of decadence and degeneracy, and keeping away from men who are of that type as he would keep away from lepers.

The forests of modern life abound in trees draped in green vines; but some of these vines are the deadly poison ivy; and as our virile young men walk joyously through the winding paths let them beware of what they touch.

COMPARE SICK RATES.

A basis for computing the sickness that might be saved by total abstinence is furnished by comparison between the sick rates of abstaining and non-abstaining societies, made by Mr. H. Dillon Gage, public actuary of South Australia, in 1892. He found that the average weeks of sickness in three societies of abstainers was 1,248; in three societies of non-abstainers the average weeks of sickness was 2,317 (lacking only one-sixth of being twice as much).

The investigation made by the Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics of Labor in 1895 indicated the following percentage due to alcoholism:—

	Per Cent.
Crime	84.41
Pauperism	48
Insanity	35

Several English life insurance companies—the Sceptre, the United Kingdom, and General Provident and others—have found by their statistics, running over forty years, that abstainers have a death rate about 23 per cent. lower than non-abstainers. Since the figures of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York give the same advantage to American abstainers (23 per cent. lower death rate), it seems fair to take available com-

ON DESERT ISLAND.

The Czar of Russia Will Spend His Summer on One.

In electing to spend his summer holiday on one of the uninhabited islands near Bjorko, off the coast of Finland, the Czar is merely following an example set by his famous ancestor Alexander I.

Alexander, when worn out with the burden of government, used to retire for a week or ten days to a flat, reedy island he owned on Lake Ladoga, and there while away the time, absolutely alone, in fishing and wildfowl shooting, varied by reading.

Nor are royalties the only people to whom the delights of an island solitude appeal after this peculiar fashion, for some little time back the New Zealand Government issued a protest to picknickers who were wont to resort to Antipodes Island, Bounty Island, and Campbell Island, during the summer months, relying upon the visiting cruiser, which calls at regular intervals, to pick up on the approach of winter. "The vessel," ran the warning, "calls at the islands for castaways, and not to bring off people who purposely visit them in order to enjoy a cheap and novel holiday."

Since then, nevertheless, the fashion has spread, and regular parties are now formed each year to go holiday-making, not only on these comparatively near-by islands, but to spots so far distant as Amsterdam Island, St. Paul's, and many lonely islets lying along the line of route to these remote and little visited places. Of course, however, a proper craft is chartered for the trip and ample provision is made against all emergencies.

In the same way it is becoming quite common for people here who wish to get right away from the beaten track to spend their summer holidays in Spitzbergen, which, although icebound during about nine months in the year, is readily accessible by steamer during the other three.

It is lonely, of course, but those who have been there say that it possesses an ideal health-restoring climate, while the ice and cliff scenery is of surpassing grandeur and magnificence.

NOT A HEALTHY SIGN.

Number of Paupers in England is Increasing.

The number of unemployed and the extent of pauperism, according to figures being published in the English papers, is simply appalling. One person in every thirty-seven in England Wales is a pauper, according to statistics just issued by the Local Government Board.

The year 1909 opened with just a little short of 1,000,000 persons in receipt of relief, an increase of 3.4 per cent. over the previous year. There were 145,735 able-bodied paupers on January 1, 1909, this vast army of unproductive consumers having increased by 18,486 in twelve months. The number of able-bodied men relieved on account of want of work or other temporary causes increased during the same period by 133 per cent. The total number of persons supported or assisted by the community is the highest recorded since 1872, al-

But as the maids are on what is called the "travelling staff," and always travel with Queen Alexandra and attend to the packing and unpacking of the Royal luggage. A travelling maid must speak French fluently, and most of them speak German as well.

The footmen at Buckingham Palace are under the supervision of Mr. Warren, the Palace steward. A certain number of the messervants are detailed every day for personal attendance on the King and Queen, which is, in official language, termed "close wait" duty. Half a dozen servants are usually on close wait duty, the remainder being on what is called Palace duty. The latter wear the Royal livery, but the servants on close wait duty don plain black morning dress. Mr. Warren himself is always on close wait duty.

At dinner the King's personal attendant wears plain evening dress. He waits on no one else, and everything is served by him to his Majesty with the exception of wine, which is served by the wine butler.

There are six footmen in attendance at the main entrance to Buckingham Palace throughout the day from nine to seven, when the number is reduced to four, who are on duty until midnight; one servant remains on duty in the entrance hall throughout the night.

On the occasion of any reception or entertainment at Buckingham Palace, the full staff of servants, of course, is on duty until all the guests have departed.

CALLING ON ROYALTY.

Callers at Buckingham Palace who come to see the King or Queen at the request of either of their majesties these may consist of personal friends or people who have been summoned to the palace on matters of State or private business. They are shown into the presence of Royalty by Mr. Warren. Other callers are shown to the apartments of the members of the Household when they have called to see by one of the footmen.

Royal servants do not receive unusually high wages. Indeed, with the exception of half a dozen head servants, who are in receipt of salaries averaging about £100 per annum, the Royal servants are not better paid than those in the establishments of many well-known wealthy people.

The only exceptionally highly-paid Royal servant is Mr. Menager, the head chef, who receives £200 per annum.

But few servants are so fortunately placed as those in the employ of Royalty. Dismissal from the Royal service is a thing practically unheard of, and every servant is absolutely sure of a good pension in his or her old age.

In addition to these advantages, the Royal servants receive the best of cure and medical attendance when they are ill, free of any charge whatever.

A large number of Royal servants are married and live outside the Palace. All these receive a special allowance, which is made to the married servants, to cover the rent of the house. The animals found in Manchuria: Bear (black and brown), wapiti, Sika deer (two species) roe deer, serow, wild pig, leopard and lynx—all, however, very scarce and hard to bag, with the exception of roe deer and pig.

ACROSS OCEAN IN AIRSHIP.

Designer Says Distance Can be Made in Seventy-two Hours.

A trip from England to America by airship will be possible next year, and according to Baron Roenne, a Russian, and the designer of the craft which is being built especially for trans-Atlantic travel, the craft will negotiate the distance in seventy-two hours.

The new vessel is at present being constructed about ten miles outside of London, and a group of English financiers are back of the proposition.

The craft will be a monster, and will be capable of carrying 38 tons with its own weight. It is to be one thousand feet in length, sixty-five in diameter, and will be driven by sixteen propellers.

It is to be a rigid dirigible with an outer cover of an alloy called dionium, the surface of which is to be so prepared as to resemble a mirror.

This is to be the pioneer of a fleet of such British airships. Influential men are considering the formation of a company to promote the building of an aerial navy and the establishment of a passenger and mail service.

ABOUT ALUMINUM.

So Pliable That it Proves Useful as Textile Material.

Though aluminum takes first rank among metals for lightness, combined with toughness and durability, it is hardly what one would expect to prove useful as a textile material, but the articles now made from it include neck cloths, pompadours, shoes, belts, neckties, shawls and hats. Straps and laces for shoes are among the newest productions. Stoves or screens from aluminum have proven especially valuable in sugar refining, as it quickly becomes coated with acid, resisting oxidizer and it can be woven alone into fabric for other purposes.

The latest results, however, are obtained by employing the aluminum yarn smooth or twisted—as warp, with colored silk threads for weft. When this cloth is made into cloaks or theatrical costumes, the effect is very striking, and the body of a beautiful woman is said to look as though dipped in silver. Fabrics and cloths from glass and silk threads woven together attracted much attention when exhibited in Paris some years ago.

FISH PRODUCED LEPROSY.

Men of former ages, unless they lived near the sea or a river, had great difficulties in gratifying their taste for fish. The great houses had their fish ponds or stewes, but sea fish, such as cod, bream, sturgeon, herring and sprats, were salted, and the excessive consumption of highly salted fish in the middle ages is said to have produced leprosy. Fish was also baked in pies to enable it to be carried for great distances.

rate about 23 per cent. lower than non-abstainers. Since the figures of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York give the same advantage to American abstainers (23 per cent. lower death rate), it seems fair to take available computations of the English life insurance companies as a basis for estimating the saving of life that would result in the United States if individuals should decide to give up the use of alcohol.

TAKE INSPECTION EASILY.

It is well known that persons who indulge too freely in alcohol show far less resistance to infectious diseases than abstemious individuals.

Here is the gravest indictment that may be brought against the abuse of alcohol. It is not, however, the only one. The relation of drinking to insanity, peripheral neuritis, Bright's disease, cirrhosis of the liver, inflammation of the stomach, arteriosclerosis (a most common cause of apoplexy), tuberculosis; to crime in all its forms, and to all the possibilities incident to the hereditary transmission of a weakened organism has been pointed out. If personal hygiene is a duty, it is the duty of every man to recognize the danger from alcohol to himself and to his progeny yet unborn. Instead of copying the habits of others, he may consider the responsibility of causing others to copy him.

SLAVES AT LONDON ZOO.

Ants Forced to Act as Nursemaids and Scavengers.

There are some hundreds of wretched little nursemaids at the Zoological Gardens, London, England, who never get a day's holiday and whose services are never paid for. They are the uncomplaining victims of a barbarous system of slavery, for the homes of their childhood were raided by swarthy savages, their kindred slain, and the babies carried off into captivity to act in the menial capacity of nursemaids and scavengers. They are members of the ill-fated Formica Fusca nation of black ants, and their brutal task-masters bear the suitably bloodthirsty title of Formica Sanguinea.

The latter are big, reddish ants, who show fight in their glass case in the insect house if a finger be held up. They are becoming very rare in England. One spot alone is known to harbor them, so, in the interests of science, the habitat of these slave-making ants is vaguely given as "South of England." When they make a raid they exterminate the entire nest of Formica Fusca and spare only the larvae and cocoons of their victims.

When these hatch out they are rarely allowed to see daylight. In the Zoo's colony I saw a wandering black slave hustled into an earthly tunnel when the keeper opened the case to place some honey within.

This makes the second ant colony in the insect house, and the nest of wood ants which has already been established there for over a week, is flourishing strongly. The wood ants evidently were dissatisfied with the hastily designed nurseries they at first constructed, for they exhumed all the ant cocoons and dragged them down into fresh tunnels which they had been busy upon, and which apparently led to a safer fortress.

able-bodied men relieved on account of want of work or other temporary causes increased during the same period by 133 per cent. The total number of persons supported or assisted by the community is the highest recorded since 1872, although calculated in relation to the increase of population the proportion is lower.

The number of casual paupers has increased by 75 per cent. since 1900. Sixteen million pounds is expended annually by the poor law authorities, and the distribution of the local authorities has risen to £30,000,000; in London alone some £10,000,000 is expended every year on charity.

The outlook for the coming winter here is admittedly worse than last winter, when the authorities had to deal with a greater extent of employment than in any year since the distress committees of the Local Government Board took up the herculean task. During the winter of 1908-9 distress was twice as bad as in the preceding year, both as regards the total number of applicants for work and the number of applications entertained. One in every eighty-five persons in districts covered by Distress Committees registered themselves as out of work last winter. The great majority of the applicants were under fifty years of age.

LOPSIDED MEN.

Modern Methods are Ruining the Handicrafts.

Sir Frederick Treves, among the most notable of English surgeons, declares that modern scientific and engineering discovery is playing the mischief with handicraft, once so greatly admired and so patiently trained for.

"At the present time not a year passes that does not add some wonder to the list of things manufactured. It must not be inferred from this that man as a master of handicraft is becoming every year more adept. Handicraftsmanship has a limit just as there is a limit to the power of vision and of hearing. Has that limit even now been reached or is it by any possibility declining? In response to the question, 'Are we losing the use of our hands?' I would venture an answer in the affirmative and say that we are."

A machine shop of big equipment strikes the layman with awe. He marvels at the skill which has built the mechanisms. Yet there are men working in many of these larger plants who are utterly lacking in handicraft. Some can run a drill press day after day and month after month and never be able to sharpen the tools they use. They get them sharpened from a storekeeper and turn in the dull ones. Men work at lathes who wouldn't know how to go about it to make a cold chisel. Some labor at intricate machines at astonishing speed and with seemingly finely trained eyes, but shifted from that particular work they are lost and bewildered.

Industrialism is to be blamed for more than the ruin of handicraft. It has twisted good men and made broad-minded men mentally narrow and lopsided.

The sinner is in no hurry to collect his wages.

OUR WATCHES.

Contain Most Complicated and Marvelous of Mechanisms.

We hear much from time to time of the wonders of this or that complicated and intricate machine, but there are few pieces of machinery more marvelous than that of the common watch.

A watch, it may be stated as a general proposition, is the smallest, most delicate instrument of the same number of parts that has ever been devised. About 175 different pieces of material enter into its construction and upward of 2,400 separate operations are comprised in its manufacture.

Certain of the facts connected with its performance are well high incredible, when considered as a whole. A blacksmith strikes several hundred blows on his anvil in a day and, as a matter of course, is glad when Sunday comes; but the roller jewel of a watch makes every day—and day after day—432,000 impacts against the fork, or 157,680,000 blows during the course of a year, without stop or rest—some 3,153,600,000 blows during the space of twenty years, the period for which a watch is usually guaranteed to keep good time.

But the wonder of it does not cease here. It has been calculated that the power that moves the watch is equivalent to only four times the force used in a flea's jump. The watch-power is, therefore, what might be termed the equivalent of a four flea-power. One horsepower would suffice to operate 270,000,000 watches.

Furthermore, the balance-wheel of a watch is moved by this four flea-power 1 to 1½ inches with each vibration, or 3,558½ miles continuously in one year.

Not much oil is required to lubricate the little machine on its 3,500-mile run. It takes only one-tenth of a drop to oil the entire machinery for a year's service.

THE LATEST FAD.

Frying Pancakes the New Amusement in France.

If you want to be anybody in Fie ch society just now you have to be an expert pancake-fryer.

Pancake-frying amounts to a craze and no social gathering is complete without a contest at it. Prizes are given for cleverness, just as they are given in progressive card games, and some of them are big enough so that the contents might fairly be called gambling.

The rage started with the potato-frying tournaments which have been a feature for years at French country fairs. Of course these fryers are professionals—not amateurs, like the contestants in the social pancake-frying events. The potato contests are held in the open air under big red umbrellas, and in front of red-hot furnaces with frying pans full of grease on top of them. Juries composed of respectable retired chefs award prizes to the fryers responsible for the tastiest spuds, which are then disposed of, priced accordingly to quality, to the bystanders. The latter eat them the way we do peanuts. "Les frites" they call them.

One day some society leader happened to see one of these tournaments and reproduced one in his

PLACED BABIES ON TRACK

HEROIC MOVE OF WIVES OF STRIKING QUARRYMEN.

Stopped a Train of Trucks Loaded With Building Stone—Riot Followed.

With heroic resolution the wives of several hundred striking quarrymen at Mery-sur-Oise, France, placed their babies on the railway track to prevent the removal of some trucks. The expedient was certainly a novel one, and was used with pathetic effect. A strike among the quarrymen has been going on for some time. All work had ceased for a week, and the dispute was so serious that the owners of the quarries refused to have any more interviews with the strikers until work was resumed. A report went around that number of trucks loaded with building stone, which had been standing idle for a week, were to be hauled away. A locomotive, in fact, was waiting at the station. A crowd of two hundred strikers proceeded to the siding and the railway station, and sat on the rails. Their wives soon followed them, some carrying their babies in their arms and others wheeling them along in perambulators.

THE LOCOMOTIVE WHISTLED

for the road to be cleared, and started to move. The women took their babies and placed them on the track. "Dare to run over them!" they shouted, and screamed to the driver of the locomotive. The engine came along slowly, puffing and blowing out the steam like a big monster. The women never flinched as it came nearer and nearer. They knew that the engineer would not dare to crush the infants. The engineer looked on quietly, but he did not dare. When the engine had come to within a few yards of the babies he thought it had gone far enough, and the engine stopped and blew off steam harmlessly. A squad of policemen and some station employes parleyed with the strikers and their wives, but it was of no use.

A captain of gendarmes came along and ordered the arrest of seven men, who were marched off. But this failed to move the strikers, who remained in possession of the track. The sub-prefect then came, accompanied by magistrates and several high officials of the company, and tried to bring the strikers to terms, but the babies remained on the rails and the

MEN LAY DOWN ON THE TRACK

All idea of removing the trucks were given up, and in the evening the strikers, who still held possession, dragged together a heap of sleepers, and set fire to them to keep themselves warm. Their wives, meanwhile, took their babies home in triumph.

Later the situation became riotous at Mery. The strikers smashed the machinery at several quarries, about a hundred gendarmes were unable to hold them in check, and the brakes on the railway trucks were put out of gear. When the gendarmes approached the strikers their wives resorted to their previ-

MEANEST MISER IS DEAD.

He Was the Wealthiest Man in the German Capital.

A whole crowd of relatives are beginning to fight around the will of Privy Councillor Albrecht Plaut, who died a fortnight ago. He was at once Berlin's richest citizen and its most notorious miser.

Plaut, who was 80 years old, was formerly chief of an important stock broking firm, and was a speculator of the most daring order. At the time he retired he was paying $50,000 a year in income taxes alone. But he lived in a tiny two room flat in a poor quarter, and did all the work of the place himself. He spent most of his days, after his retirement from business, in the Zoological Gardens, where he ate his lunch and dinner, both consisting of bread and butter, which he carried in his pocket, wrapped round with a newspaper.

Of stories of his penuriousness there is no end. Once at a family reunion all present gave gifts to the others. But the millionaire laid before each guest a covered dish labeled "Gift of Privy Councillor Plaut." The guests lifted the covers and found under each a quarter of an apple. On one occasion he invested two cents in a glass of beer at the Zoological Gardens. The beer was not to his liking, and next morning the manager of the restaurant received an unstamped letter demanding the penny back.

THE PROLIFIC FLY.

A single fly, a little more than a month, will produce a progeny of over 1,500,000. House flies survive the winter in the person of several sturdy females, which hibernate from about October to April and May. They stay in the secluded corners of out-houses and stables. Then, on the first warm day of spring, out they come, and, if the weather continues fine, proceed to lay their eggs. They lay about 120 at a time, and, roughly these eggs take three weeks to develop into the perfect adult insect.

"Every time the baby looks into my face he smiles," said Mr. Meekins. "Well," answered his wife, "it may not be exactly polite, but it shows he has a sense of humor."

quality, to the bystanders. The latter eat them the way we do peanuts. "Les frites" they call them.

One day some society leader happened to see one of these tournaments and reproduced one in his own home. Society instantly followed his example. The tournaments were immensely popular, but not the potatoes. Society's stomach wasn't sound enough to take care of them as efficiently as the stomachs of the masses, who watch the open-air contests in the country.

So pancakes were substituted. Electric stoves have also been adopted in place of the potato-frying furnaces, which are not very convenient things to instal in drawing-rooms. A few enthusiasts are having model kitchen-parlors built for the entertainment of their friends and the gratification of their appetites.

Five o'clock p.m. is the orthodox hour for the frying parties. Instead of going to a 5 o'clock tea, you go to a 5 o'clock frying tournament.

CABMEN'S USELESS DUEL.

Were in Love With the Same Washerwoman.

Two cab drivers, Jean Thibault and Pierre Roux, who occupied the same stand in the Boulevard des Batigolles, Paris, and had been on excellent terms, quarrelled on making the discovery that they were in love with the same washerwoman. Neither of them had proposed to Marie Hamard, the object of their affections, and they decided to fight the matter out to settle who had a better claim before either of them approached the object of their affection. A combat took place in a quiet street. It was a duel on level lines. There were no seconds, and the weapons used were whips, with which the combatants mercilessly lashed each other. They were exhausted and bathed in blood when a policeman arrived on the scene and took them to the police station.

The next morning they were dismissed with a caution, and happily their enmity has been again turned to friendship, for the washerwoman on hearing of their story hastened to their cab stand, where she expressed her regret at having caused the trouble and added that she had already been engaged for some time to a plumber.

FIRES OVER 9,000 POUNDS.

Brazilian Battleship, Just Completed, Has Record Discharge.

The Brazilian battleship Paulo, which is being turned over to the Brazilian commission that went to England to take her over from her English constructors has fired the record broadside. Ten 12-inch guns and eleven 11-inch guns were fired simultaneously. The weight of metal comprised over 9,000 pounds. The ship was in no way damaged by the discharge.

In the latest British Dreadnought row in service the broadside is delivered by eight instead of ten 12-inch guns and thirteen 4-inch guns. The sister ship of the Paulo, the Minas Geraes, being built for the Brazilian Government, will have the same broadside.

about a hundred gendarmes were unable to hold them in check, and the brakes on the railway trucks were put out of gear. When the gendarmes approached the strikers their wives resorted to their previous strategem, and threw themselves on the road with their children. A regular skirmish took place at an embankment between gendarmes and strikers, the latter hurling showers of stones and iron scrap. A gendarme was badly wounded, and had to be conveyed to the hospital.

STRONG AND HEARTY AT 101.

King Sends Message of Congratulation to Old Lady.

The King sent a message of congratulation to Mrs. William Colver, mother of one of the oldest members of the Sheffield City Council, who celebrated her 100th birthday. "Moderation is Duration" is the motto of Mrs. Neighbour, who celebrated her 101st birthday at Sunningdale, Ascot, England. Residing with her daughter and son-in-law in Cowarth road, she spent the day very quietly, not having a family gathering as last year. She has several sons and daughters living, and her eldest son has great-grandchildren.

The old lady is tall and upright and looks quite thirty years younger than she really is. Her eyesight and hearing are good and her faculties unimpaired. She was born near Hgham, and has lived within a ten-mile radius of that village all her life. One of her greatest delights is to stand at the garden gate and watch the motor cars speed by. She has always been a believer in hard work and fresh air.

In a list of inhabitants who have lived in six reigns which is being compiled for the Isle of Wight two centenarians and twenty-three nonagenarians are already included. The centenarians are Mr. Charles Pratt, 101, Ryde, and Mrs. Saunders, 100, Wootton. One of the nonagenarians, Caroline Wilson, while in service at a residence in Brighton when Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort were visitors, had the honor of taking the late King Edward as a baby in her arms.

A WOMAN'S HAT.

Paris Court Takes up the Problem of Defining it.

A Paris court has attempted to solve the problem of what is a woman's hat, and has been reduced to postponing its decision for a fortnight. The point was raised in an action for breach of contract brought against the proprietor of a house who had let one of his flats to a tenant who, having an antipathy to hatters, stipulated that the shop below should never be let to anyone following the hat trade.

Some weeks ago a milliner rented the premises and the landlord is being sued by the hatting tenant for breaking the agreement. The landlord in his defence pleads that a milliner is not a hatter, as her creations are not intended to be a protection to the head, but are eventually nothing else than an adornment of the lace, while the tenant replies that the headgear of a woman is still a hat, its services as an ornament being merely an incidental function.

Recently a cremation society was formed in Edinburgh. The object of the society is to promote the practice of cremation and burial reform by means of meetings, lectures and publications or otherwise. There are already about 180 members, including many well persons.

ABOLISH ORPHANS.

Australia's Wise Management in Looking After Fatherless.

In Australia they have as nearly as possible abolished orphans. As soon as a child loses its parents it is taken by a police officer to a respectable woman who cares for it and gets together the date required for its record. Then acting as agent for the children's council, she and the officer take the child to the children's court, where the facts are entered, and it is legally put under control of the council. When these formalities are completed the council selects from among the farmers of the state a home adapted to the child, who is informed of his relations to the council and his new home. He is put under the special charge of an officer of the council, and sometimes two or three homes are tried before a successful one is found.

In rare instances it becomes necessary to send a boy or girl to a reformatory. The child as soon as old enough is sent to school and is taught farming. Regular reports are made to the council, and there are parole officers in each locality who watch over the interests of the orphans. There are also local boards of women who act as friendly supervisors and visitors.

Up to 13 years of age the State pays all expenses. Then the child begins regular work at 24 cents per week, and until he is 16 three-quarters of what he earns is put in the postal savings bank. Wages rise yearly till 21 is reached, and then if a girl marries, or a boy wishes to learn a trade, their savings, under the advice of the council, are given them.

This experiment, if such it may still be called, has been in operation for 30 years.

"WHITE APRON BRIGADE."

Fake Servants in Paris Have Been Robbing Employers.

The Paris (France) police have been obliged to organize a special detective brigade to watch domestic servants in Paris.

Information has been received at headquarters of a thieves' organization called the "White Apron Brigade." By means of forged testimonials the members of the gang, which is several hundreds strong, obtain situations in private houses and rob their masters. A few days ago two women who had stolen $600 and $1,000 worth of jewelry were arrested by the police. One of them, a German girl of twenty-four, had already committed more than a hundred thefts. When out of service she lived in an expensive flat in Paris, beautifully furnished, in which the police have found a number of valuable pictures believed to be stolen. The woman's last alias was Marie Muller, but she has at least eighteen others.

STORM AND EARTHQUAKE

Lightning Strikes and Explodes a Gasoline Tank in a Halifax Store.

A despatch from Halifax says: Nova Scotia was visited by a severe electric storm on Thursday morning, accompanied by heavy thunder and a terrific downpour of rain. During the storm the building occupied by I. Creighton & Sons, grocers, on Campbell road, was struck by lightning, which entered the shop where the telephone wires were. The lightning travelled along the wire until it reached the rear of the shop, where it struck the gasoline tank, exploding it. The damage done was slight. The storm was very heavy at Yarmouth. At Barrington the passage of the storm began on Tuesday afternoon and continued at intervals until midnight. Lightning struck a house of Capt. Horatio Brinnen and shattered one of the chimneys; one of the inmates was quite badly injured. The home of John G. Nickerson was wrecked: A hole was made in the roof, the carpets ripped up and doors split in every room. The family received only a slight shock. Two buildings at Shag Harbor were also damaged. Heavy downfalls of hail damaged garden plants.

At Yarmouth seismic disturbances occurred on Wednesday night at 10 o'clock, greatly alarming the people. A terrific shake, which lasted for five seconds, was felt in every house in town.

CROPS DOING WELL.

Prof. Zavitz of the O. A. C. Receives Reports.

A despatch from Guelph says: "Speaking for the Province as a whole, I find, from official reports sent to me by our representatives, that the crops are in a very promising condition," says Prof. Zavitz of the O. A. C. "In eastern Ontario the clover crops are proving to be record-breakers, having attained an exceptionally fine growth through that portion of western Ontario of which Middlesex county is the centre. The winter crops, such as fall wheat, are a little patchy, but on the whole there is little reason for complaint. The late spring, particularly the cold weather in May, retarded to some extent the growth of all crops in the Province, but this drawback was compensated by the fact that the germination of all crops maintained a very good standard, and, consequently, the outlook for the Province is exceptionally bright, and the yield ought to surpass that of last year."

GRATEFUL RAIN SAVED CROPS

A despatch from Winnipeg says: According to reports received from all over Western Canada by local grain men, the late rain came when it would be most beneficial to the growing grain. Little or no damage is reported by any of the correspondents, although the crop is somewhat small in some of the shady districts. The general statements are that, had the drought continued until the end of the week the results would have been disastrous, but practically every place in the whole belt reported rain. The crops are best in Saskatchewan and Northern Alberta. Manitoba comes a close second, while those of the irrigated districts in the vicinity are virtually heading out, and will be ready for the binder within two weeks, if the present warm weather and showers continue. After the big rain the crops around Winnipeg have grown as though they were in some huge hot bed.

of the train and was killed instantly. Brown was thrown from the buggy a distance of about twenty feet. The train backed up and took him to the Wabash station, where he lay unconscious for about two hours. When he came to he told his name and was removed to his grandmother's here, where a doctor was summoned. It is not known yet how badly he is hurt, but he will probably recover.

GOLDWIN SMITH'S ESTATE.

Most of It Has Been Left to Cornell University.

A despatch from Ithaca, N. Y., says: Cornell University will receive the major part of the estate of Goldwin Smith, who was prominently identified with the early history of the university. Announcement of the bequest was made by President Scherman to the Alumni Association on Wednesday. Its value will not be known until the executors file the petition for probate next week. The will says: "I make this bequest to show my attachment to the university, to pay respect to Ezra Cornell and to show my attachment as an Englishman to the union of the two branches of our race on this continent and with their common mother." The estate, it has been estimated, will total around $1,000,000.

FATHER OF THIRTY-ONE.

Pierre Poudrier Receiving Congratulations of His Friends.

A despatch from Quebec says: Pierre Poudrier of St. Alexis des Monts was congratulated on Thursday on the birth of his thirty-first child. Mr. Poudrier is 63 years old, and has been married three times. Seven children were born from his first marriage, fifteen from his second, and from the last nine. Of these 31 children, 23 are still living, and the eldest is 45 years of age. Mr. Poudrier appears no older than his eldest son.

THE HORRORS OF STOMACH TORTURE

INDIGESTION OF A LIFETIME PROMPTLY CURED BY "FRUIT-A-TIVES."

Mrs. J. R. Flock, of London, Ont., for years received the best medical attention that Canada afforded.

Her husband was a prominent physician, yet his skill and that of his colleagues, was of no avail in helping Mrs. Flock.

She writes, "I was a constant martyr to Stomach Weakness all my life and no physician could cure me, but 'Fruit-a-tives' gave me entire relief and I cordially recommend this famous fruit medicine to the public."

"Fruit-a-tives" corrects all disorders of digestion, and is a positive and speedy cure for Indigestion, Dyspepsia and Constipation.

"Fruit-a-tives" are sold by all dealers at 50c a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial box, 25c, or may be obtained from Fruit-a-tives, Limited, Ottawa.

WALTER ROSS HANGED.

Protested His Innocence of Wilful Murder.

A despatch from North Bay says: Walter Ross, who was found guilty of the murder of Percy Parkinson, his prospector chum and partner, at Ramore, Timiskaming district, last December, died on the scaffold on Tuesday morning at seven o'clock. In a statement to the press Ross said:

"I am thirty-three years of age; I was born in England; the place does not matter. I have lived in Canada and the United States for the last nine years. Am a mechanical engineer, and have been all over the world following my vocation. I have never married. You cannot put it too strongly that Parkinson was shot in self-defence. I had been in the Cobalt country about three years, and Parkinson and I were partners. Parkinson seemed to get in a frenzy when bad tempered. I admit lying to Constable Rowell as to where I spent the preceding night, but it was to shield the woman. I do not fear death, and the only thing that troubles me is that Canadian justice has not given me a square deal in any shape or form. I gave myself up, thinking I had nothing to fear, as the shooting was in self-defence, taking the first train and returning with the officer, when I could easily have escaped."

WHY YOU ARE THIN; HOW TO GET FLESHY.

Prescription Accomplishes Wonders

A treatment which anyone can prepare cheaply at home, has been found to increase the weight, improve the health, round out scrawny figures, improve the bust, brighten the eyes and put new color into the cheeks and lips of anyone who is too thin and bloodless. It puts flesh on those who have been always thin whether from disease or natural tendency; on those who by heavy eating and diet have in vain tried to increase; on those who feel well but can't get fat; and on those who have tried every known method in vain. It is a powerful aid to digestion, nutrition and assimilation. It assists the blood and nerves to distribute all over the body the flesh elements contained in food, and gives the thin person the same absorbing qualities possessed by the naturally fleshy.

Everybody is about the same, but certain elements and organs of blood and nerves are deficient and until this is corrected, thin people will stay thin. The nutrition stays in the body after separation by the digestive functions instead of pass-

Annual Report Shows Large Increase in Revenue.

A despatch from Montreal says: That the harbor of Montreal had applications for 25 per cent. more accommodation than it could give in 1909 is one of the statements made in the annual report of the Harbor Commissioners, just published. The report points out that 1909 was devoted to the study of plans of development, which have since been financed and are under way. Big increases in revenue were reported. The amount disbursed on capital account was $878,570.

VOYAGE OF AERIAL LINER

A despatch from Dusseldorf, Germany, says: The first regular airship passenger service was inaugurated on Wednesday, when Count Zeppelin's great craft, the Deutschland, carrying 20 passengers, successfully made the first scheduled trip from Friedrichshafen to this city, a distance of 300 miles, in nine hours. The weather was perfect and the motors worked faultlessly. The average time maintained for the complete course was approximately 33 miles an hour, but between Friedrichshafen and Stuttgart the 124 miles was covered in an average rate of 41 miles an hour. The best speed for a single hour was 43½ miles. Count Zeppelin was at the helm when the Deutschland rose at Friedrichshafen at 3 o'clock on Wednesday morning and sailed away on the trip that was to mark an epoch in aviation. The passengers were some of the directors of the Hamburg-American Steamship Co. and the German Airship Stock Co., joint owners of the dirigible, and guests. They occupied the mahogany-walled and carpeted cabin, situated between the gondolas, and from the windows viewed the scenery as the aerial car swept along. Count Zeppelin steered for the greater part of the distance.

TRAINMEN REFUSE AWARD

Board Has Ignored Differentials Existing in C. P. R. Territory.

A despatch from Montreal says: The committee of the Brotherhoods of Railway Trainmen and Railway Conductors have refused to accept the award of the board of conciliation in regard to the wage dispute with the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk Railways. Their decision was made on Wednesday afternoon, when they sent the following telegram to the Minister of Labor at Ottawa:

"The general committee, representing the men employed in the train and yard service on the C. P. R., unanimously request us to advise you that they have received and thoroughly considered the award handed out by the board of arbitration in the recent investigation.

"While thanking the board for its earnest efforts, honest consideration and intent in preparing the award referred to, the committee are compelled to advise you that it is unsatisfactory, being impracticable of adoption, and that it cannot be accepted.

"For reasons best known to the gentlemen comprising the board, standards and comparative differentials existing in the territory and on the C. P. R. have been entirely ignored, or, worse still, reversed, thereby making the award as handed down impossible of acceptance.

"We are this date writing Mr. McNicoll, quoting the telegram, and asking if his company are still indisposed to recognize past and recently revised standards in the territory."

This is signed by James Murdock, vice-president of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, and S. H. Berry, vice-president of the Order of Railway Conductors.

The standards referred to in the telegram to the Minister of Labor are those paid by United States railways entering Canada, so that practically the demand of the men is that wages on Canadian railways be placed on the same basis as those in the United States in territory contiguous to the Canadian border, that is upon the New York Central and its affiliated lines, which are closely in touch with the Canadian frontier.

Appeal for Help for Families of Montreal Herald Victims.

A despatch from Montreal says: Ten widows and eighteen minor children are left dependent as a result of The Herald disaster. A careful canvas of the families of those who lost their lives in the disaster shows that ten of the victims left behind widows and families who had been dependent on their earnings for support. In addition, four of the men supported, in whole or in part, widowed mothers. Another helped his mother and invalid father. Of the thirteen girls and young women who lost their lives, eight left fathers and mothers behind. Two were practically the sole support of their widowed mothers, and a number of others assisted in the support of widowed mothers. Eighteen young children lost their fathers in the disaster. Public appeals will be made on behalf of the sufferers.

BOARDERS HAD TO JUMP.

One Man was Badly Hurt in Haileybury Fire.

A despatch from Haileybury says: One man was probably fatally injured and several others badly hurt in a fire which destroyed the King Edward boarding house on Brown street early Wednesday morning. It was filled with boarders at the time of the fire, who just escaped in their night garments. The man who was very badly injured was Dave Clay, an Englishman about forty years of age. He is in the Allen Hospital, and the doctors hold out little hope for his recovery. Tom Baily is also in the hospital suffering from the shock in jumping. John Irish, another boarder, had his back badly strained in jumping from the third story window, and Albert Taylor, a young man who tried to catch Clay in jumping, had his face badly lacerated. The building was owned by Harry Steele, and his loss will be $6,000, with no insurance.

EGGS FOR NEXT WINTER.

Being Gathered Into Cold-Storage Warehouses.

A despatch from Newark, New Jersey, says: Forty-five million eggs have been shipped into this city since April 1 and placed in cold-storage by warehouse men, to remain there until the big shipments of last winter are duplicated. The eggs come mostly from Indiana, Michigan and Ohio. They were purchased at an average price of from 20¢ to 24 cents a dozen. Two cents a dozen is added to cover insurance, storage costs, etc., which brings the total cost up to about 26 cents a dozen. If the eggs can be retailed in New York next winter at 45 cents a dozen, which they sold for last winter, there will be a profit of 19 cents a dozen, or a total of something over $700,000.

A despatch from Winnipeg says: Tremendous wind and rain storms following the heat are reported from all parts of the west. At Halbrite, Sask., twenty buildings were destroyed in ten minutes, but no one was seriously hurt. George Hassen, farmer, living one mile from the town, lost a new barn and house costing $3,000, which were completely razed. Damage amounting to about $10,000 was done at Dugald, Man., east of Winnipeg.

the buildings destroyed including a large warehouse at North Portal, Sask.: A cyclone lifted large barns and did severe damage, killing several horses and other stock.

A despatch from Lumsden says: During the progress of the wind storm, R. H. Miller's new barn west of the town was completely destroyed. John Burness, aged 36, an employee, was struck by falling timbers and died immediately. His wife and three children came from Scotland three years ago.

Daimler

MOTOR CARRIAGES

AWARDED DEWAR TROPHY.

The Dewar Challenge Trophy is awarded yearly by the ROYAL AUTOMOBILE CLUB for the most meritorious performance of the year under the general regulations for certified trials.

The New Daimler engine has now been in the hands of the public for nearly 18 months, quite long enough to prove its merit; owners are sending in testimonials by every post and we should like to forward to any person or persons interested a complete set of literature fully explaining this marvelous new motor. Send also for our new illustrated booklet, "The Dewar Trophy and how it was won," a history of the Greatest Engine Test on Record.

UNITED STATES.

It is estimated that on a hot day New York spends about $1,500,000 on beverages.

Porter Charlton, arrested at Hoboken, N. J., admitted having murdered his wife at Lake Como, Italy.

Chief of Police Kohler of Cleveland has been acquitted of the charges against him and reinstated.

A Canadian jurist will have a place on a Board of Arbitration that is to settle a boundary dispute between Mexico and the United States.

Two Buffalo girls were locked in a box car accidentally and carried off to New Jersey, where they were released after two days.

Four persons were fatally injured at Coney Island when two cars on a scenic railway left the track while going at a high rate of speed.

The United States Congress has voted $10,000 for the expenses of a commission to be appointed to investigate the means of promoting universal peace.

Porter Charlton, who admitted murdering his wife in Italy, may not be extradited from New Jersey, as it is possible that Italy may not ask to have him sent back for trial.

GENERAL.

Roumania has sent an ultimatum to Greece demanding satisfaction for damage done a Roumanian mail steamer at the Piraeus, and threatening action if the demand is not met.

ONE MORE DEMENTED VICTIM

Unknown Man Jumped Into Niagara River.

A despatch from Niagara Falls, N. Y., says: An unknown man jumped into the Niagara River from the Second Sisters Island on Friday morning, and was carried over the Horseshoe Falls. He was seen by two tourists, who had just alighted from a carriage. The man hurriedly threw off his coat and vest and made the plunge before they could prevent him. Nothing was found in the clothing by which the suicide could be identified.

BIG ROBBERY OF ORE.

Lucky Godfrey Mine Lost Thirty Thousand Dollars' Worth.

A despatch from Cobalt says: Thirty thousand dollars' worth of ore were stolen from the Lucky Godfrey Mine by employees. The ore was stripped from the vein matter and refuse and placed in bags. The theft was disclosed upon the arrival of a shipment at a smelter.

MAGAZINES BLEW UP.

Contractor's Heavy Loss by Forest Fires.

A despatch from Port Arthur says: Contractor McEwen, working on the N. T. R. north of Lake Nipigon, suffered the loss of two powder magazines, which were exploded by forest fires. They contained 100 cases of explosives, and were valued at $15,000. The magazines were on an island, and the fire jumped across from the mainland. No one was injured.

Martin-Senour Paint

100% Pure, Preserves

It feeds the hungry open pores of the wood with pure linseed oil, lead and zinc—making the surface absolutely impervious to climatic changes.

It seals wood from dampness—prevents it from splitting, cracking, from sun and frost, blistering heat and blowing dust, which help the processes of decay and ruin. Good pure paint buys more than 100 cents worth of insurance against the ravages of time.

The ingredients of a pure paint are well known. In the main they are Carbonate of Lead, Oxide of Zinc pure Colors, well ground by specially adapted machinery, and thinned with pure linseed oil and pure turpentine dryer.

A building owner who fails to recognize the great importance of selecting the right paint, will see his property value decrease while he grows aged and peevish wondering why.

Notify us if your dealer cannot supply you, we'll gladly direct you where our paints can be had.

Rev. Geo. Dunkley, a former well known resident of Morven, died on Tuesday at Hiawatha, Ont., where he was a guest at the Indians. The remains were brought to Napanee on Thursday and the funeral took place on Thursday afternoon in the White Church, Morven, and interment at Morven cemetery. Besides his widow, two sons and two daughters remain. The daughters reside in Picton.

Chas. H. Dunwoody, one of the most highly respected farmers of this vicinity, was the victim of a sad accident on Saturday morning. Deceased was loading hay in a field and his team took fright, became unmanageable and ran away. Mr. Dunwoody was thrown off the load and the load upset on top of him, injuring him so severely that he passed away a few hours afterward. Deceased was 66 years of age, a bachelor, and a man well known and well liked by all who knew him. The funeral took place from his late residence, South river road, on Tuesday afternoon. Services were held at the house and interment in Riverview cemetery. A brother and sister are left to mourn his sudden death.

Lowering all records for the walk across the continent, Jack Eldredge, a man of twenty-six, arrived in San Francisco, Tuesday, covering 4,000 miles in 77 days. Eldredge's performance won him a purse of $2,000 offered by the Boston Athletic Club for any one covering the 4,000 jaunt within a hundred days. The record for the distance had been held by Edward Payson Weston, who walked the 4,000 miles in 105 days last year. Eldredge left Boston March 15. The 77 days in which he covered the distance were walking days, as he rested on Sunday.

Ever since the appearance of Halley's comet, now and then a notice appears in different papers concerning hens which lay comet eggs. On Monday one of these strange freaks of nature was brought to our office for inspection. The owner of the hen which produced this peculiar egg is Mrs. Henderson, a resident a short distance down the York road. The egg is of the soft shelled variety, and about the usual size. Attached to the end of the egg is a substance of the same nature as the covering of the egg, which would measure about three inches, if pulled out in a straight line, but its original shape is similar to that of the first quarter of a new moon. The exhibit is certainly a curiosity.

FRASER—SCHEFFEL.

Edwin K. Scheffel, a member of the New York Stock Exchange, living at 20 East Fifty-seventh street, was married Tuesday, June 21st, 1910, in London, England, to Miss Florence Elizabeth Fraser, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Fraser, Napanee. The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride's cousin, Mrs. Charles Sale, at Mount Road Harrow, in the presence of the immediate members of the two families. The bride was given away by Charles Sale, while Walter Scheffel a brother of the bridegroom, acted as best man. Those present at the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. Jules S. Bache, the latter a sister of the bridegroom; Mrs. Adolph Scheffel, mother of the bridegroom; Mr. and Mrs. Walter Scheffel, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sale. The wedding was quiet, owing to the recent death of the bridegroom's father, Adolph Scheffel. Miss Fraser crossed the Atlantic for the ceremony, owing to the necessity of Mr. Scheffel's presence in London.

Victor Herbert wanted the EDISON Phonograph

because he believed it was the only sound-reproducing instrument that fulfilled all conditions, and because he believed that by means of an Edison Phonograph only could the widest distribution be given to good music.

Victor Herbert makes good music himself. He is now making it for reproduction in the Edison Phonograph and is himself supervising the work of his own orchestra in making the Records.

Victor Herbert's Records are but one of the many attractions which the Edison Phonograph offers you.

How about an Edison Phonograph Christmas?

Edison Phonographs can be had from	$16.50 to $168.50
Edison Standard Records	40
Edison Amberol Records (play twice as long)	65

Meteors.

There is one very interesting fact connected with meteors that have struck the earth. Hundreds of them have been examined and found to contain animal remains—that is, the very lowest forms of life. This indicates that they are parts of a world that burst into fragments long, long ago. What a thought—a world broken up and scattered through space! Maybe we had another moon once, but that broke into pieces and these are the pieces, and maybe they are parts of the planet that once revolved between Mars and Jupiter. Over 500 of the larger pieces of this planet have been discovered and catalogued. One of these flew away inside of Mars' orbit. Why may not many of the smaller pieces and these solid meteors be they? It is probably so.—Columbus Journal.

COUNTING A SCORE.

It Represents the Whole Man, Ten Fingers and Ten Toes.

Twenty is called a score because it represents the whole man, ten fingers and ten toes. Etymologically it means a cut or mark. In very early times, when men could not count beyond twenty, or "one man," it was usual to cut a notch in a stick and begin again, and so it went on, one man, two men, and so on. This is why sheep are still counted by the score. Now, a tally (French taille, cut or nicked) means an account kept by means of a notched stick, and until the end of the eighteenth century such sticks were given as exchequer receipts, accompanied by a written document. This was also the usual way of keeping accounts in the inns of the middle ages. The number of drinks or meals a customer had were scored against him on what was called a tally stick, and when it reached twenty, or a "whole man," he was expected to pay. In some English country inns scores are still kept on a slate, four chalk marks and one across—five—and four of these make twenty, or a score.—Westminster Gazette.

Escapes in War.

Until war ceases, which will be the greatest miracle of all, it will always be the exhibition ground of miracles. How can a bullet puncture a man's coat behind and before or pierce his boot and sock and be gravely shaken out of both without wounding him? And what mysterious channel does this human body contain which leads a bullet dexterously around the heart, a hair's breadth from the seat of life, yet never rending it—a phenomenon vouched for by more than one army surgeon? On Monday of last week at eight o'clock, at St. Vincent de Paul church, by Rev. Father Hartigan, Miss Sarah Gartland, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Gartland, was united in marriage to John Rush, of Petworth.
The bride was becomingly attired in grey silkolene, with hat to match, and was assisted by Miss Stella Larkins, cousin of the groom, attired in pale blue silkolene with white hat, each carrying a white prayer book. The groom was supported by Patrick Gartland, brother of the bride. After the ceremony, they returned to the bride's home, where a wedding dejeuner was served. Mr. and Mrs. Rush then left for their home at Petworth, where they will reside. The groom's gift to the bride was a gold watch and chain, to the bridesmaid, a gold bracelet and to the groomsmen, gold cuff links.

ERINSVILLE.

Farmers who have hitherto been jubilitant over the prospects of an abundant harvest are now in a more despondent mood on account of the continued prevalence of the dry hot spell.

Edward Breault spent Sunday under the parental roof.

A quiet wedding was solemnized at the Roman Catholic church here, on Monday, when Miss Minnie Kennedy was united in matrimony to Edmund Donahue. The bride was attired in a gown of pearl gray satin and wore a large picture hat. She was attended by her sister, Miss Aggie, while Martin Donahue did the duties of best man.
After the ceremony they drove to the bride's home, where a number of guests had assembled.

James O'Neil and his sister, Miss Agnes, spent Sunday in Stoco.

The Way to Float.

This is the advice of an old swimmer to those who cannot swim: "Any human being who will have the presence of mind to clasp the hands behind his back and turn the face toward the zenith may float at ease and in perfect safety in tolerably still water. When you first find yourself in deep water you have only to consider yourself an empty pitcher. Let your mouth and nose and not the top of your heavy head be the highest part of you and you are safe. But thrust up one of your bony hands and down you go, turning up the handle tips over the pitcher." There are reason and logic in this.

Dense.

One day the teacher asked her class to write an essay on London, about which they had just been reading.
When examining their papers later she was surprised to read the following:

"The people of London are noted for their stupidity."

"Where did you get that from?" asked she of Maggie Jones.

"Please, miss, it's all in the book.
It says 'the population of London is very dense.'"—London Answers.

Props.

"My dear brother," said the clerical looking man, "are you doing anything to keep your brother from falling?"

"Why, yes," was the reply. "I'm interested in a concern that manufactures lampposts!"—Boston Courier.

Advanced Ancestral Pride.

"So Woodby is very rich now. When I knew him he was poor. His only treasure in those days was the musket his great-grandfather carried in the Revolution."

"Oh, his great-grandfather has been promoted since. Woodby exhibits his sword now."—Philadelphia Press.

The Limelight.

"Pa, what is meant by the limelight?"

"The limelight, my boy, is something that everybody wants to be in without paying advertising rates for the privilege."—Detroit Free Press.

vouched for by more than one army surgeon? Shells have burst thunderously between the very legs of soldiers and left them still soldiers. Pömpom shells of two inches diameter have passed through legs and arms without shattering the bone or bursting at the impact, though there appears to be literally no room for such a merciful performance. In fact, a history of the escapes in war would be wild reading even after a course of Munchausen.

Sharing His Bed.

A Grub street friend of Dr. Johnson's was Derrick, of whom he wrote.
"I honor Derrick for his strength of mind." One night when Floyd, another poor author, was wandering about the streets he found Derrick asleep upon a bulk. Upon being suddenly awakened Derrick started up.
"My dear Floyd," said he, "I am sorry to see you in this destitute state. Will you go home with me to my lodgings?"
And they turned in on the bulk together like the good fellows they were.

Artful Innocence.
